WILLIE JOE BRAZZLE

Black Man Needs Kidney Transplant

LONGVIEW, TEXAS— A kidney transplant for Willie Joe Brazzle will cost $16,000.00. Because his two children only play with little change they have little real conception of how much money is involved. All they know is - like most children would know - is that they want their "daddy" to be well again.

20 years ago Willis Joe Brazzle was a stout-hearted football player at Texas College in Tyler, Texas. He was known for his determination in the heat of contest and for his will to win against uneven odds.

Today Willis Joe Brazzle

Frances Hawthorne

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hawthorne, Jr., 1223 10th Street, flew to Roanoke, Va., for the 20th bi-ennial convention of National Jack and Jill of America, Inc., held July 13-17.

Mrs. Hawthorne, incoming president and delegate for the Des Moines chapter, was still shows the perseverance and strength which made him a stand-out athlete. Only the opponent is different.

Brazzle needs a kidney transplant, according to his physician, in order to improve the emission of harmful substances from the body. Currently his kidneys are only about 10 percent functional.

Brazzle's sister, Mrs. Hazel King, has offered to donate one of her kidneys and she has been tested at Parkland Hospital in Dallas where the transplant would take place.

Since 1971, Brazzle has used a Travenol kidney machine in order to assist in the purification of body substances. In 1970 he spent several weeks in Parkland during which time he underwent hemodialysis.

With a new kidney Brazzle hopes to be able to work again. Such a transplant would cost $16,000, according to Sidney Lee, former coach and long-time friend and teammate to Brazzle. Lee believes contributions are nearing $8,000.

Lee is leading the charge for Brazzle in East Texas, and he is asking that more fortunate persons send contributions to First National Bank of Longview elected National Editor of the 132 chapter organization. In that position she will edit and publish the organization magazine, UP the Hill and attend meetings of the national executive board.

In The August Issue of Ebony Magazine

"Black Male Is Now the Natural Leader of America" says August EBONY

"The liberated black male is now the natural leader to whom America must turn if it is to move past the style into the substance of a democratic society," says black psychiatrist, Dr. Price M. Cobbs, in the August "Special Issue" of EBONY. Dr. Cobbs, a psychiatrist in private practice in San Francisco, is the co-author (with Dr. William H. Grier) of the best seller, Black Rage. Says Cobbs, writing in EBONY: "It is a totally new experience for many black men to open their minds and see how they are being copied. In walk, in dress, in music, in language and social consciousness, the black male is supplying some vital missing links to America."

The noted black psychiatrist is convinced that the United States is witnessing the emergence of what he calls "The Liberated Black Male." The type of man Dr. Cobbs is describing has tapped within himself a wellspring of creative energy. This new found energy allows and even forces the black male to revitalize relationships with his fellow black men and to seek heightened emotional and intellectual pleasure with black women. Dr. Cobbs sees the liberated black male as measuring masculinity and manhood against black standards and competing only with himself. "The liberated black male is reborn, buck naked and brand new," says Cobbs.

The entire August "Special Issue" of EBONY deals incisively with the frustration and torment besetting the black male in America. The liberated black male has been to the mountaintop to search deep within himself for answers. In finding the secret to their own survival, the black man holds the key to survival to white America, and in the age of alienation and violence, America may finally have to ask us for help, reports EBONY.

Sex and the Black Male

Are black men sexually superior to white men? Dr. Alvin F. Pouissant, a black Harvard psychiatrist, examines some hard facts and fantasies about the legendary "black stud" in the August "Special Issue" of Ebony.

Says Pouissant:

"Black male sexuality has been enveloped in myths, fantasies, distortions and stereotypes. Popular literature alludes to black prowess, but sexual studies and reports provide few hard facts. Black for uncertain reasons have not been analyzed in the major sex studies and the common beliefs about black male sexual power cannot be confirmed or rejected on the basis of objective information."

Black men have been both glorified and victimized because of their alleged sexual prowess. Many black men have been publicly castrated and murdered for supposedly raping white women. Emmett Till, a 14 year-old black boy was murdered in Mississippi for "eyeball rape" (merely looking at a white woman); and predictably his killers were all freed.

It's no secret, reports EBONY, that in the ghetto black boys must learn early that they must indulge in sex in order to "prove their manhood." And like other boys of similar class backgrounds, they spend a lot of time talking and experimenting with sex.

However, data are gradually appearing which shows that sexual enjoyment of low-income blacks may, unfortunately, be reduced because of frustrations built into a life of poverty.

In raising the rug off the sickness which surrounds the question of race and sex in this country, EBONY uncovers some interesting reasons which a black male might have for "sleeping white"—many of which aren't sexual reasons at all.

Mrs. Parker is a member of the Union Baptist Church and holds offices on the Usher Board and the Pastor's Aid. She is also Associate Matron in the Order of the Eastern Star, Chapter Princess Oziel No. 9, State of Iowa Jurisdiction.

Fours years of working with the legislature as a matron has given Mrs. Parker great insight into the workings of the Congressional body. During these years she attended the legislature sessions daily. There she was able to carefully observe the proceedings, read the journals, discuss the calendars and visit with the representatives, senators and lobbyists themselves.

"I feel it is time for some good 'ol honest people to people talk, no more buffoonery and no more promises. I also feel like it is time to give a woman's touch to the position. There has been representation in this district all these many years and yet there are great areas of wide-spread neglect in this district (Witness: the S.E. Bottoms Area) I feel it is time to give attention to the elderly, the women, and the children in my area. I feel it is time to equalize the tax structures with the economy so that the working man actually will receive goods and services for which he pays so dearly now. It is time to organize taxation so that the elderly are not forced from their homes because of exorbitant taxes and rents. TAPSCOTT FOR GOVERNOR

I APPROACHED RICHARD FREEMAN ON HIS first day as director of the drug abuse program. Except for the problem of making time for his talk with me, he was in very good form. I first met Freeman, when he was a college student at Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. At the start of our talk, I stated that I wanted to know how he got to where he is; in other words, I wanted to begin with Coe College days and come to the present.

FREEMAN LEFT COE COLLEGE in 1967. In reality, 64 to 67 were spent at the Jane Boyd Community House as director. In '67 he came here and worked in the Community Outreach Program for the YMCA. In 1968, he worked in a combination program stemming from the United Campaign and the YMCA, as a mobile work director. In '68 he joined the City in the Concentrated Employment Program as director, remaining until the first half of '70.

FREEMAN NEXT ENTERED DRAKES LAW SCHOOL. Worked fulltime in Occupational Upgrading Program as director and was in school part-time. The going was pretty rough. He has put school aside. His hands are full. He feels a real commitment to his work and to the people with whom he is involved. Dick feels the program has come a long way in the past 6 to 9 months. "There are hard times to be faced and that they will overcome. We just have to find a way," he said.

FREEMAN FEELS THERE IS A GROWING SENSE of brotherhood in the community. It is evidenced, he feels, in the people's reaction to him. For example, they may not agree with how he goes about a thing, but they react as though they are willing to wait and to see and in this way express a belief that he is doing his best and is trying.

THIS TO MY THINKING, IS THE LEAST WE CAN DO," he reflected. "Give a person a chance to create and to promote. Be ready to help, but not to criticize."

FREEMAN'S APPROACH TO LIFE IS practical and beneficial in spirit. He doesn't employ high and lofty terms. He says things like one must try and when one doesn't succeed, then try again. At one point, he stated that one has a heart and a mind to put to each chore.

In January, 1972, in San Francisco, California, he was named national chairman of the National Federation of Concerned Drug Abuse Workers. He is dedicated to this work and feels that Iowa is a splendid setting for the work. Here, he says, you can see what you are doing, can see the results of your efforts. It is a beautiful field.

FREEMAN ASKED IF I WERE FAMILIAR WITH the program, I had to admit that I am not. He is prepared to lend me literature. He referred to President Nixon's Special Action Office for Drug Abuse and the efforts of the Ford Foundation and others to work with the President's Office. He placed in my hands some other materials which I am to read. I expect to fully acquaint myself with the goals of his office and on my part be an informed portion of the citizenry and be of assistance to Freeman.

RICHARD FREEMAN IS AN EXCELLENT CHOICE as director of the Drug Abuse Service. He is accustomed to the public, to working with the young. He is dedicated, his whole history is one of action and of seeking knowledge. He is the right young man in the right place at the right time. We can prepare the brotherhood in which he can do his best work. He speaks well of Iowa and we are Iowa! His work is our community. So we must be interested. We are it!

Bishop James Thomas was reassigned to Iowa for another four years Thursday by the Episcopacy Committee of the United Methodist Church.

Bishop Thomas was named bishop for Iowa in 1964. Under church rules, a bishop can serve no more than 12 years in any location so this will be his last term in Iowa, church officials said.

The announcement was made at the North Central Jurisdiction of the United Methodist Church meeting in Indianapolis, Ind. Fifty-four delegates from Iowa attended.

Gross in Senate Race

Ralph Gross

Ralph Gross, Democratic candidate for the State Senate (34th District), speaking Sunday at a meeting of his supporters, called for changes in state auditing practices, making it possible for the public to see exactly what they are getting for their tax dollars.

Gross said, "State legislators have in the past been forced to increase or cut various department budgets across the board because of a lack of adequate statistics concerning efficiency of specific programs. State government is in theory like a business, but if businessmen were to operate as the State does, they would go bankrupt. The people are tired of increased taxes with no serious effort to check proficiency."

"As a citizen, I want to know how well a program operates," Gross said, "and as a senator I should not be forced to budget departments blindly - reducing or increasing a request with absolutely no meaningful data upon which to make a judgment. The time has come to institute a program of performance auditing."

HUD Pledges 14 Million For Soul City

WASHINGTON—A black-owned enterprise, Soul City Development Company, has received the first Federal commitment for construction of a rural "new town" anywhere in the nation.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development has pledged $14 million for the development of Soul City, a new industrial community to be built in a depressed agricultural area of North Carolina.

Spearheading the new city is Floyd B. McKissick, a North Carolina native who formerly was national director of the Congress of Racial Equality. Only weeks ago, McKissick joined with hundreds of other blacks meeting in Washington, who endorsed the re-election of President Nixon this November.

The Federal government has helped to finance 10 previous "new town" projects, but all have been satellite towns of major metropolitan areas.

Soul City will be the first new town to be constructed in a rural area under the Urban Growth and New Communities Development Act of 1970.

HUD pledged $14 million in the form of a guarantee of assistance contingent upon Soul City's Company ability to attract industry to the proposed new community.

Ultimately, the new community is expected to house 44,000 residents. The initial emphasis, however, will be on industrial rather than residential construction.

McKissick also has obtained the support of two North Carolina banks and a New York bank, as well as the state of North Carolina's economic development authority, in the planning of Soul City.

The new community near Manson, N.C., is approximately 45 miles south of the Virginia border.

Residential development of the integrated community will include apartments, town houses, garden apartments, single-family homes and medium-rise apartments grouped near commercial, educational and recreational facilities.

The town center will contain retail stores, offices, hotel facilities and restaurants. An educational park is proposed as the site for all public education facilities above the element school level.

Bicycle and pedestrian pathways will be separated from the internal road network on the 5,180-acre site.

McKissick, a native of Asheville, N.C., was a lawyer in Durham, N.C., before he succeeded James Farmer as CORE national director in 1966. In his early civil rights activities, he successfully represented his daughter in her efforts to be admitted to a previously all white school.

McKissick, who formed Soul City Development Company in 1968 to foster minority-owned and controlled businesses, lived in Harlem while directing CORE's activities. He later returned to North Carolina to concentrate on building the economic base of black Americans.

Government Gears Up For Massive 'Workfare' Hassle

WASHINGTON—Federal and state agencies are gearing up for a massive hassle of more than one million welfare recipients under the guise of finding them jobs and reducing the welfare rolls.

The effort is mandated by the Congress, beginning July 1.

Assistant Secretary of Labor Malcolm R. Lovell, Jr., acknowledged, however, at a press briefing on the joint Labor-HEW effort, that past "workfare" programs "have not been very effective and that may be a conservative statement."

He also gave a flat "No" when asked whether the Department's past on-the-job training programs, a key feature of "workfare", had been a success.

Nevertheless, the Department of Labor and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare are launching, under legislation sponsored by Georgia Senator Herman Talmadge, Jr., a greatly enlarged version of their past "work incentive" program.

Under the program an estimated 1.2 million welfare recipients will be required to register for jobs or job training in the next two years or face loss of their welfare benefits.

Lovell predicted that, in addition, some 300,000 other recipients, most of them mothers of pre-school children, would voluntarily register for the program in an attempt to get better help in finding jobs than they have gotten in the past from traditional Federal employment programs.

Mothers of pre-school children are not required to sign up for work. There will be no such choice, however, for able-bodied men in families receiving aid for dependent children or for more than one million women who are the heads of households receiving such aid.

They will be called in by their local welfare departments during the next two years and required to register for work at whatever jobs the local employment agencies can find for them.

Lovell said fathers (who number an estimated 140,000) will be called in first, "then women with older children before those with younger children, then mothers with fewer children before those with many children, and finally those who are newer on the welfare rolls before those who have been on longer."

He estimated that 750,000 persons would be registered during the first year of the program and the remaining 750,000 in the second year.

Registration will not guarantee a job, however.

Once the local welfare agency certifies to the local employment office that a welfare recipient is employable and that such necessary social services as day care for a mother's children have been arranged, the employment office must find a job that pays more than the recipient's old welfare benefit, plus a $30 a month bonus the registrant is due for participating in the "work incentive" program.

Finding the jobs will not be easy in a lagging economy where more than five million Americans are currently seeking work and are unable to find it.

New York State's experience with the nation's first compulsory "workfare" program has not given the Labor Department much encouragement on this score. A study by HEW and New York agencies showed that of every 100 adult welfare recipients sent to a state employment office to register for a job, 10 eventually had their welfare payments reduced or cut off for failing to comply with the requirements of the law - principally that they report to the employment agency every two weeks to pick up their welfare checks.

But only 425 of the 11,472 welfare recipients referred to state employment offices studies were placed in jobs. And only one third of those 425 were still working six months later. Another third had been laid off and the remaining third had quit.

Assistant Secretary Lovell claims the New York program failed as a job placement effort largely because no extra money was given to the local employment offices to do more job finding.

Lovell said lack of money would not be an excuse in the new Federal "workfare" program.

The Administration has asked Congress for $455 million to carry out the program in its first year. This is $250 million more than the $205 million previously requested for the largely voluntary and largely ineffective "work incentive" program of the last four years.

The program has been ineffective, not from lack of volunteers, but from lack of jobs. Since 1968, the program has enrolled 385,100 persons and only 82,500 of them have been placed in jobs.

By way of comparison, 160,000 persons are currently in public service jobs created by the emergency employment program enacted by the Congress last year over initial Administration opposition.

Of the $445 million projected for the "workfare" program this year, the Labor Department will spend $225 million on its manpower services, including the job-hunting efforts of the state-federal employment offices.

It will allocate $40 million of the manpower funds to the creation of 8,000 more public service jobs and $49 million for on-the-job training for 50,000 other former welfare recipients for an average of six months each.

The faltering on-the-job training program, under which the Federal Government pays an employer up to $1,000 of the first year's salary of a former welfare recipient will be beefed up by a new 20 percent tax credit to the employer on the part of the salary which he pays. As a tax credit rather than a business deduction, the 20 percent incentive payment would be worth almost twice that much to an employer paying the 47 percent corporate tax on profits over $25,000 a year.

Lovell said the emphasis in the new program will not initially be on job training to upgrade the skills of those on welfare.

"First emphasis," he said, "will be on finding employment, rather than trying to improve skills. We are going to try to place as many people as possible in available jobs, a change from our policy in the past."

Lovell also said the assumption will be that most welfare recipients are not unemployable. "We are assuming that they are not working because they were not knowledgeable about the labor market, the child care problem, etc."

He said "an individual on welfare is not necessarily a bad employee. Most of them are on welfare because they have children."

He was less emphatic, however, about whether his own department and the state employment agencies would be hiring former welfare recipients for some of the jobs created by the "workfare" program. He said employment in manpower programs related to workfare would be increased from 4,800 to 8,000 in the next year. HEW, he said, expects a similar expansion.

As to filling some of these jobs with former welfare recipients, he would only say that they would be hiring some "if they are suitable."

The Black Experience is going beyond that white caseworker to the black administrator who tells you the same thing.

the fine print

Well the Democrats really out did themselves this year as far as delegates go. They definitely got all kinds of grass roots - it's good to see they get their hands dirty (better yet, clean) with the earth of America.

You really can't complain about the ticket either. For once in recent political history we'll have a two party election!

The Republican convention inside will be dull as ever except for 'Stand - Out' Agnew but outside should prove to be interesting - who knows maybe another Chicago '68.

But in order to make this a worthwhile election, everyone should register and VOTE. No matter who you vote for, the important thing is that you didn't cop out and then complain for four years that the wrong guy is in office.

Des Moines isn't without its surprises every once and a while, like with this airport fee. More like duty than anything else - just a plain import and export duty. That brings to mind shadows of the ole Tea Party to mind. So now you will have to save all your pennies to get out of the "Big City". But then again it would be worth it - sorry about that Chamber of Commerce.

The big question for the democratic ticket is whose going to endorse them. AFL-CIO doesn't know and Mayor Daley does but can't bring himself to mention any name but you know who they are.

Appropriately named, "hoecakes" used to be made by baking corn meal and salt on the blade of a hoe!

Corn plants, like people, need "vitamins," too. And just by adding very small amounts of Sequestrene metal chelates to their soil, farmers can increase their corn yields by 10 bushels or more an acre! (A chelate is a special "vitamin" combination of metal and organic materials that plants can easily absorb.)

U.S. Has Lost Confidence In It's Government

WASHINGTON—If there was any consensus among the 130 individuals and organizations that testified before the Democratic platform Committee here it was that Americans have lost confidence in their government.

Speaker after speaker — young and old, men and women, black, and white, Indian and Chicano — sounded the same note. They used different phrases and spoke in different accents, but it all added up to the one word "alienation."

Mrs. David Bradley, national vice president of the League of Women Voters, spoke of widespread "discontent" and charged that the people of America are "fed up" with a government that is "unresponsive to their needs and wishes."

The 26-year old executive director of the National Movement for the Student Vote, Ridley M. Whitaker, spoke of the "cynicism of young people" and the "crisis of confidence" our country is undergoing.

Zeroing in on urban problems, Gary's black mayor, Richard Hatcher, deplored government's "casual concern about the plight of blacks and poor people" and the "danger of indifference and despair about the future of our cities."

Speaking on behalf of the Urban Coalition, Hatcher described the crippling and alienation of our people" and charged that "our cities are being abandoned."

"By far the most shocking aspect of the abandonment problem" said Hatcher, "is the apathetic and ineffectual reaction to what is happening by the country's leadership, both public and private."

New York Mayor John Lindsay attacked the Nixon regime as an administration that has grown away from the people" and the head of the country's fastest growing labor union, Jerry Wurf of the AFL-CIO American Federation of State, County and municipal Employees, described in detail "the growing inability of government in America to provide the services needed and demanded by its citizens."

Two presidential contenders — Senator Ed Muskie and Rep. Shirley Chisholm — both used the word "malaise" to describe the country's mood.

Muskie spoke further of "growing feeling that government cannot be trusted" and urged that the highest priority be placed on "restoring the faith of average Americans in the credibility of their political institutions and leaders."

And Ms. Shirley Chisholm spoke of our "national trauma" which she described further as "a widespread frustration and often outrage at all levels of society over the seeming helplessness of individuals."

In a hard - hitting speech which got a standing ovation from the 150 - member committee, the black Congresswoman from Brooklyn spoke of the "upheaval in America today and attacked the Nixon administration for its "thinly - concealed contempt for the black minority in America and its "malicious and morally repulsive strategy to smother civil rights advances for political gain."

A spokesman for the Raza Association of Spanish - surnamed Americans, Raul Yzaguirre, spoke of the Chicanos and Puerto Ricans as an "invisible minority" and NAACP assistant director John Morsell, speaking also for the Leadership Conference Civil Rights, described the "frustration" and "desperateness of the situation" in the minority communities of our nation.

Rep. Ron Dellums, black Congressman from California, summed it up as "the absurdity of the racist establishment."

Presidential contender Terry Sanford, former Governor of North Carolina, spoke of the "anxieties, frustrations and fears" that "possess our people" today. In strong language, the former governor of North Carolina told the committee of government "ineffectiveness" and warned:

"I cannot remember a time in our nation's history when our people have been at greater odds with government than they are today...They feel lost in a maze of government bureaucracy, powerless to shape its workings in their interest, increasingly threatened by its insensitivity to man's needs."

This seemingly unrelieved litany of despair was, of course, accompanied by frequent demands for new legislation, new domestic programs, and more federal funds — as one would expect at a Democratic Party session.

What was surprising was the note of caution sounded by several speakers thinking that these familiar proposals would solve the problem.

Sanford, for example, warned against "the frustration of over - promising and under - performance."

With a characteristic smile and a bang of his gavel, Mayor Ken Gibson of Newark heeded the gentlemen's advice and brought his tired committee back to order — and back to earth.

Letter From Prison

Being incarcerated must be deeply understood. The black man must constantly encounter struggle to remain the sole-possessor of his mentality.

There are white racists who call them - selves authorities on humanity, the functioning of human beings, who don't allow the black inmate to grasp his cultural identity. The black inmate is expected instead to submit to white supremacy.

The penal system is a form of genocide that is waged against the morale of the black inmates. For example, by confining the black person for a prolonged period of time, his relationship with reality is dulled to such a point that once released he finds that the penal rhetoric does not coincide with social reality. A state of confusion is fertilized within the inmates mind and this is often the provocation that sends the inmate back into confinement and confusion.

To merely supply an inmate with a vocation that he can not put to use once he is reintegrated with society is not enough. Arm this human being with the ability to think and that is his weapon against reincarceration. Don't force upon him a system of values that he doesn't relate to, because this is the act of actually killing the man, this person of life, not helping him.

The penal system must bring about a complete abolition of its dealings with the black people. The lily-white structure of the system of incarceration is attempting to impress its values upon the black man. Without realizing that the Blacks and whites live in two different worlds. The penal authorities deal with the black person the way he would a white, reconstruction of white ways and values, to think white thoughts. The response of the black man must be in white-fashion or it is not satisfactory to the penal authorities. In other words the penal system is just another institution that has been formed to place the black man into a state of robotization.

Any black man who points out the injustices inflicted upon his people while they are imprisoned will be subjected to more time, disciplinary action, physical abuse by the penal authority, even death if an inmate states and acts like he can't conform with injustices.

It is important to bring to light the dehumanizing pacifications that are used by the penal system to kill the will to oppose their unjust methods of robbing a black man of his manhood mentally. Thus becoming the weapon that robs the black man of the morale to confront. The obstacles that stand in his way are possible parole, work-release, etc.

All of those who battle to remain a man in black-ness and refuse to conform to a white-social element face a system that merely overlooks the dehumanization, robotization, and destitution of reality within a lilly-white racist institution of "so called rehabilitation."

Let me elaborate on "rehabilitation": man's adjustment materializes by being intact with society, his environment, not through incarceration. And in order for him to gain his freedom into the social - prison - population he must become European (white) in his way of thinking. To the penal system becoming white in the way of thought is rehabilitation. To become a journeyman in the area of menial labor is rehabilitation. In other words to fulfill the picture they already constructed within their minds of blacks being illiterate, lazy, forever smiling and shuffling.

So now in the year of 1972 Black inmates are still expected to remain supposedly inferior to the penal authorities only to be released into a social-prison only and have to deal with the same type of situation on a larger scale in order to remain in a massive - social - prison population.

It must be a goal for the brothers and sisters to grasp a very profound realistic comprehension of the mentality of black humanity and question why is it a necessity for the black people who are incarcerated in the tanks of dehumanization to submit to such an inferior position or going as far as giving up their blackness of mind, just to please some honkie (white man) who has never been subjected to the hells we, the black people, have encountered.

I have drawn this conclusion; the awakening, to the profoundness of the black man's mind starts to take place in confinement, the abuse of his people does not become vivid until the abuse has been directed at him personally. Many who question why society has been constructed on such dehumanization, soon find themselves on the road to revolutionization, feeling in the depths of their hearts the injustices that blacks have endured for a life-time, and they find it a necessity to identify with their blackness, instead of imitating the white man, in his values and his European way of thinking.

Systematically it has been devised by racist - penal authorities to destroy the discovered awareness of the black man's identity, not only in the black man but the black woman who may find herself incarcerated unjustly for acts of survival.

Don't doubt these words that I am speaking, because they are being spoken from the tank of dehumanization located in Anamosa, Iowa. I have observed the stolen - manhood of black brothers who were forced to merely full the man's (white man's) desires of black people becoming white of the mind.

There is a war being waged against our people on every level of society

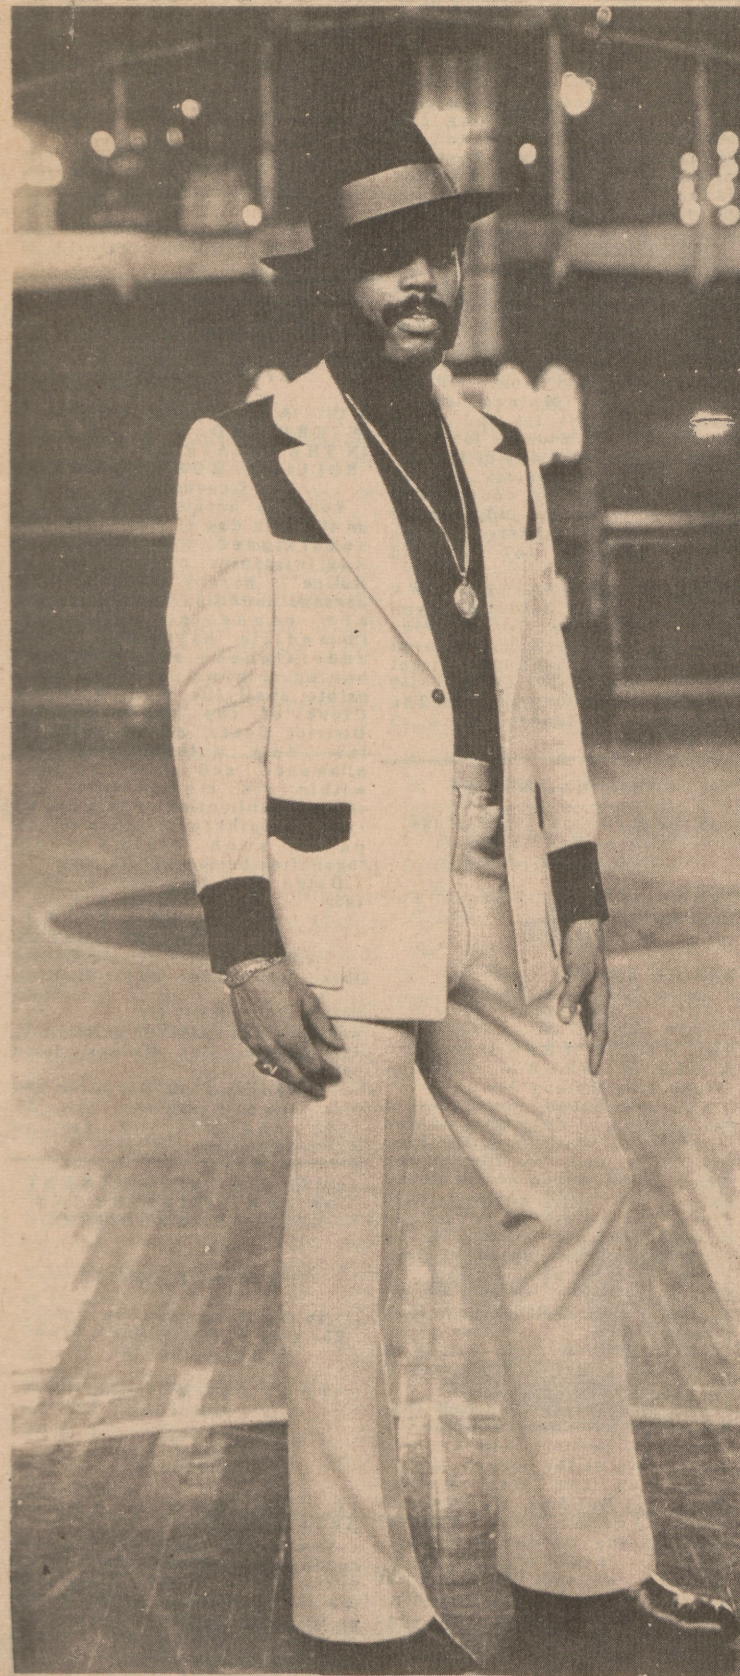

With Allen Ashby

The various little league setups in different sports makes people wonder why the idea didn't catch on sooner. Well, it did. In baseball there was a group of little fellows in just about every city that was of any size, and they had a league called the Ban Johnson league. The league was named after Ban Johnson, who was a president of the American league for more years than Methusla lived. I don't remember the age limits, but I am sure it was under fifteen. There are a few guys around who remember that league, and at least one that I know who says he played in one. They had their setups with ultimate city champions in each city, and in places like Chicago and the larger cities, that was some competition. I believe that in some places where the cities weren't so large, there was inter city competition. But the kids were more on their own than they are in the little league setups. And good sportsmanship was a must. Maybe it is now.

ESQUIRE NAMES 10 BEST-DRESSED JOCKS

New York, July 18... Walt Frazier (pictured above) is named "Best-Dressed Jock" in Esquire magazine's August issue, published today.

The New York Knicks' superstar heads the list of ten most fashionable athletes selected by a panel of leading authorities in the world of sports: Jim Brown, Michael Burke, Frank Gifford, Joe Namath and Billy Talbert, who were assisted by Esquire's Fashion Editor.

NBA All-Star, Frazier, was the only sportsman to win unanimous endorsement of the five-man panel. "It is not for nothing that he is known as Clyde," says the magazine, "a name bespeaking dash, dicty, and unpredictability that one day decrees a free-for-all version of a business suit and the next a dashiki."

Sports Then

Then in football there was fierce competition in places like Chicago with each section of town and some clubs being represented by a team of midgets who played between halves of the big professional games. This was before little league football took hold, and the kids were broken up into age groups. Then some thing was done with basketball and teams of pre teen agers and teen agers played before the packed houses at the Chicago Stadium. This did wonders for the poise of the kids. They got to play before crowds of from ten to forty thousand, depending on the sport, and they soon forgot the crowd in their efforts to win. This was probably one reason why teams from the Chicago area were so much tougher in the presence of large crowds than most high school teams. I wonder if the little league crowds get that big? And do you know, I can't remember seeing any of the parents coming out on the field telling the coach who and what to play. When Old Sol Butler was coaching the Chicago South Side teams, he would have none of that. The parent might have found himself hustled off the field by the seat of the pants and the nape of the neck. Do you think that would be effective now?

I have a promise to keep to one of the Bystander staff. I promised to write something about the Des Moines Oaks baseball club. At last I have come up on what I shall do. When they get back in town, I shall interview the black team members and learn all

I can about their traveling and living conditions on the road and here. Then I shall compare them with things as they were before they were even born, or at least, could get into organized baseball. Will that do?

This game of tennis keeps sticking its head up. About thirty years ago there was a fellow in this city who used to play just a little tennis. But he was better known as a softball player than he was as a tennis player. He moved to Chicago, and returned to Des Moines to play in our Hilltop tennis meet in the veteran's divisions. He finished second in the thing and won the title once. Then he never came back. I think because there was so much fuss made over the way he could cover court at forty six. They thought he was younger, but I pointed out that there were a lot of forty five or six year old men who could still run like hell, and the protesters quieted somewhat. Well, for the last two years this fellow, Royal Madison has teamed up with some guy to win the Chicago district doubles in the veterans division. Guess the old boy can still swing a racket, and he isn't forty six years old now, either. But I never did know when he took up tennis for keeps. Maybe it was because he wanted to belong to the Prairie Tennis Club, because just about everyone in that city who is black and likes to play tennis belongs to that club sooner or later. Maybe he will come to the Hilltop meet we hold next month, August 3 to 6.
