SBA Probe Shifts To Black Businessmen

By Jerome Grier
NMS

Investigation of possible Small Business Administration irregularities has shifted unsurprisingly to Black involvement.

A number of political leaders are charging that the probe is a self-contained effort to first discredit the agency, then disband it.

Curtis Prins, staff investigator for the House Banking and Currency subcommittee on small businesses, said that on White House orders a task force was set up in 1971 to aid Dr. Thomas Matthew, a supporter of the President who had been serving a six-month sentence for tax evasion before the President pardoned him.

Federal investigators, the subcommittee heard, saw irregularities in Matthew's companies but failed to prosecute because of possible embarrassment in the administration. Matthew is an advocate of Black capitalism.

This is the first mention of a Black being involved in the SBA scandal, but it is not the first time the White House has been accused of exerting pressure on SBA to favor loans of administration supporters.

Last month, Matthew was prosecuted by the district attorney in Queens, N.Y. on 61 counts of misusing federal funds. A Queens neurosurgeon, Matthew could have been prosecuted also for not reporting as much as $800,000 of his income, according to Marvin Shelton, an SBA official who audited Matthew's records.

Prins also read testimony that Matthew gave under oath at a Securities and Exchange Commission hearing where Matthew testified that he met with Nixon at the 1968 Republican Convention in Miami. Matthew said then that the President told him he "favored Black capitalism and he was going to use it in his campaign...he did and he gave my name."

Soon after a 1971 White House meeting, Matthew's firms received $1.8 million in loans and federal contract assistance, Prins said.

A White House spokesman said that the President was aware only of Matthew's plans for hiring hard-core minority unemployed.

total and overall response emanating from Racine and Milwaukee's inner city residents who responded unselfishly to the plight of a dying mother, stricken with Sickle Cell Anemia — a disease which attacks Black people almost exclusively.

Gloria Jones, 31, of 1736 1/2 Villa St. in Racine, has suffered from the excruciating pains of Sickle Cell Anemia all her life, as she recently detailed in an article outlining her physical condition in the November 15 edition of the Star Times.

Following the publication of that article, Robert Thomas, publisher of the Star Times, conceived the idea of a Gloria Jones fund raising drive to assist Ms. Jones in realizing the reality of one of her last and most important dreams: "To see my children happy for Christmas..."

After several confabs with his administrative staff, "The Gloria Jones Fund" was established and a goal of $500 was set by Thomas to help provide Ms. Jones and her two children, Melvyn, 14, and Wanda, 12, with enough monetary resources for a happy Christmas.

The Gloria Jones raising drive became a reality with the introduction of the November 29 edition of the Star Times in which a plea was issued to the public for donations. Response was immediate. Hoyt Givens of the Wisconsin Telephone Company called the Star Times office and offered a $50 donation on behalf of the telephone company.

Preston Carpenter of 2945 N. 15th came forward with a twenty-five dollar donation. Ms. Rosaland Johnston of 1016-A W. Locust, saw the serious urgency in the Star Times pleas for the Gloria Jones family and brought a five dollar donation to the Star Times office. Many others followed their examples. Radio station WAWA's magnetism contributed a great deal of enthusiasm when O.C. White, during his daily early morning talk show, called upon the Black community in Milwaukee to open up their hearts and pockets to "The Gloria Jones Fund." And they did!

At a time when the overall economic condition of Black Americans is being plagued by higher prices, an energy crisis and the annual cultural responsibility of providing a decent Christmas holiday for their own families, the Black community in Milwaukee proved itself capable of identifying with a critical situation by rising to the occasion with humanistic concern for a less fortunate family.

While working closely with the Star Times Staff in a unified effort, White and other WAWA personalities kept the public informed via radio as to just how "The Gloria Jones Fund" raising drive was going.

Meanwhile, a 77-year-old grandmother called the Star Times office and said that though she did not have any money to donate, she was willing to travel to Racine to volunteer her services to the Gloria Jones family as a housekeeper.

Opportunities For Black Businessmen In Africa: Do They Exist?

NEW YORK, N.Y. Dec. 1 — Business opportunities for black Americans in Africa do exist in considerable abundance, but investors should proceed with caution, warns Pat Patterson in the December issue of Black Enterprise Magazine. "The potential is enormous in view of the needs for agricultural and industrial development", asserts Patterson, "But opportunities on the continent are circumscribed by the same limitations that most blacks face in this country — a lack of capital resources and management know-how." Moreover, most of the enterprises requiring only modest capital and limited expertise have been reserved by most African countries for indigenous businessmen.

Mr. Patterson, editor-at-large of Black Enterprise Magazine, recently returned from a five week tour of Africa where he found United States investment as a whole was small and investment by Black American businessmen nearly non-existent. He said a change in America's attitude toward investing in the huge continent would help speed its development which now lags behind much of the world.

Mr. Patterson visited six countries, Liberia, Ivory Coast, Ghana, Nigeria, Kenya and Ethiopia. While business participation by American blacks was low in most places there were exceptions, notably Thomas A. Woods' Taw International Leasing, which operates in 11 countries and is the largest American owned operation on the continent and a lumber company owned by Leon Wood in Abidjan, Ivory Coast. The Black Enterprise article contends that if an American Black is to be successful in Africa, he must investigate his market personally. He should also be adequately financed and equipped with expertise in the business he is undertaking.

What became clear in Africa, the editor concluded, was "that color is no substitute for competence. The struggling African countries can no more support Black ineptitude than they could the ineptitude of whites."

MORE CHILDREN MAY BENEFIT FROM NEW SCHOOL LUNCH ELIGIBILITY STANDARDS:

More children will be eligible to buy school lunches at reduced price under new family size and income level guidelines announced today by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA).

Previously, states could serve reduced price lunches to students whose family income level was 50 percent higher than the minimums established in the federal guidelines. Today, as a result of recent child nutrition legislation, states were authorized to serve reduced price meals to children whose family income is 75 percent higher than the federal guidelines.

With the minimum federal guidelines figure of $4,250 annual income for a family of four, the additional 75 percent would permit schools to serve reduced price lunches to

A fund-raising drive with a goal of $500 reached a total of $2,500 in Black Milwaukee earlier this week. The drive was initiated to help a young Black mother of two see her children enjoy a beautiful Christmas this year. Gloria Jones is dying of Sickle Cell Anemia, and this Christmas was expected to be her last. The story of Gloria Jones, her children, the Milwaukee Star Times and the Black citizens of Milwaukee unfolds below.

BY RICHARD MORRIS

Little Diane Bentley walked into the Star Times offices and curiously examined the hustle and bustle of Star Times employees as they moved briskly through various activities of the day.

After seemingly satisfying herself that she was in fact, in the right place, she pulled off one of her mittens, shook two quarters from the mitten into her hand, leaned across the desk and asked the secretary on duty, "How much you got so far?"

"Pretty close to four hundred," came the secretary's reply. A momentary look of helplessness spread across Diane's beautiful chocolate face and she uttered a sign of futility as her bright eyes darted across the many faces surrounding her.

"Well, she said finally, "I only have fifty cents left from my allowance. But when I get my next allowance, I can give some more if you don't have the money you need by then — O.K.?"

And the concern of 8-year-old Diane Bentley only typifies the children from four-member families that have an income of up to $7,440. Under the 50 percent provision, the cutoff figure was $6,380.

Eligibility requirements for free meals were not changed.

VIEWS and REVIEWS

Christmas Gift!

It just does not seem anymore like what the name implies. A great many people and organizations have shifted their emphasis in their service to improve the moral and spiritual well-being of the people. Rather, they solicit funds throughout the year and put on a grand rush to feed the poor, lonely and hungry at Christmas time; an occasional bed to house a weary traveler.

Sure, it's fine to serenade these people with a Christmas dinner, some toys or some extra clothes, but these people need more than that.

It is easy to collect money for the poor and the unfortunate. By doing so there is some need fulfilled, but too often they come only once a year. So many organizations are collecting money for the poor these days that it is difficult to sort them out and thus prevent duplications, often placing more here and none there.

We often hear complaints that churchgoers are becoming less and less all the time. Reasons for this are varied. I would suggest that some of these Christian oriented organizations which direct their attention towards raising money to insure their existence should back up the moral and spiritual efforts of the churches. Of course, most of these groups do some good, but they have directed their attention away from the foundations upon which many were organized.

Social Security

The 1973 Amendments to the social security law will permit social security beneficiaries who are working to make more money than ever before and still receive some or all of their social security checks, Howard J. Sladek, manager of the Des Moines social security office announced today.

The amount of money a social security beneficiary can earn in a year and still draw all his social security benefits has been increased. Starting in 1974, a person who makes as much as $2400 can collect all social security checks for the year. The old limit for the year of 1973 was $2100.

Any beneficiary who is working regularly and does earn more than $2400 in 1974 or later will have $1.00 of benefits withheld for each $2.00 earned in excess of the $2400. Sladek stated that regardless of the total earnings for the year, a person is still eligible to receive a social security check for any month in which he does not earn more than $200 in wages and is not working in self-employment.

Many schools in Milwaukee's metropolitan area, which included Jackie Robinson, LaFollette, Peckham, Washington, North Division, Clarke Street, Rufus King, and several others, initiated separate fund raising drives in their respective schools for "The Gloria Jones Fund."

Wisconsin Telephone employees, American Motors employees, Veteran Administration employees, United States Forester Service employees, Ethnic Enterprise employees, and several church and community organizations in Milwaukee were able to add considerably to the final figure of total donations to the "Gloria Jones Fund."

T.V. Joe of Television Joe's Center at 2752 N. Teutonia ave., called O.C. White at radio station WAWA and volunteered a $50 dollar donation and a color television to "The Gloria Jones Fund." Following his telephone call to White, T.V. Joe hired a cab and brought a $70 donation to the Star Times office. "I know how it is. I talked it over with my wife and we both agreed that we are willing to do whatever else we can for this family," T.V. Joe said.

It is this kind of progressive and unselfish participation in the internal affairs of the Black community that will eventually free all of Black humanity clear across the planet. Much, much more can be said of the tremendous pride one gets choked up with in the realization that out there in the wide, wide, hard, hard, cold, cold world of too much social, economic, and political oppression, there are still humane and beautiful Black people who are willing to do more than just sit back uncomfortably and watch their next door neighbor suffer indifferently without the least bit of compunction to help. So stand up Black Milwaukee and take a bow! You deserve it! The world will respect you for your heartfelt participation in "The Gloria Jones Fund" raising drive. You have made a dying mother very, very happy...

Editors Note

The New Year of 1974; what it will mean to you the citizens of Iowa and this publication.

We at the Bystander office are dedicated to the avoidance of allowing this paper to go down in history as a has-been. We feel that the Bystander should be allowed to expect an infinite future of service to the Iowa community with prosperity and growth as its reward.

In order to assure this desired posture there are attitudes to be changed. (1) The lack of love of self and kind derived from ignorance of what is going on in the worlds around us and the fear of an awakening has resulted in self-induced apathy; (2) The niggardliness, close-handedness and lack of mutual respect on the part of the community as well as the Bystander has resulted in 79 years of mere existence; (3) The attitude of the general business community that exists toward the Black community which shows in their lack of response to the Black-oriented news media.

These conditions will be changed in the year 1974 in the event that we are allowed to function in truth as the New Iowa Bystander.

The Bystander is your voice and ears and not just someone's business enterprise. Without you it can't continue to exist but with your interest and our efforts we can build a powerful representative voice.

Poor Blacks May Risk Health To Save Fuel

By Eric M. St. John

(C) NMS.) — Concern over the special heating needs of inner-city blacks has prompted Harlem's U.S. Congressman to write the President a letter asking him to include the minority poor when planning to meet the administration's warning of an energy crisis.

Congressman Charles B. Rangel (D-N.Y.) has called for the Secretaries of Health, Education and Welfare and Housing and Urban Development, as well as the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, to be a part of energy crisis planning so that they will have a chance to show the President a need for special planning to assure that the poor are not frozen out by his national policy to meet the energy crisis.

Rangel pointed out that ghetto residents live in older homes and apartment buildings that are heated with "fossil fuels" by older outmoded furnaces. The old furnaces use more fuel than furnaces in new buildings.

Inner city homes and apartment buildings are also more difficult to heat," Rangel said. "Insulation is often poor or nonexistent; ceilings are high and windows are thin, if not broken."

Noting that landlords will not be willing to modernize their heating plants during the crisis, Rangel said they would instead pass the crisis on to their tenants by providing less heat during the cold months which lie ahead. "We cannot allow this to happen," he said.

Reduction of speed limits, lowering thermostats and elimination of outdoor Christmas lighting are some of the sacrifices which the President asked the American people to consider during the alleged crisis. Rangel now wants to know if the poor are also going to be required to "sacrifice their health".

PLAN YOUR PROPERTY PROTECTION

Q. A neighbor says that my regular automobile policy applies not only to my own car, but also to the one I rent for two weeks each summer when I go on vacation. Can this be?

A. Your neighbor is right. The policy covering the car you own also covers a car you rent, if it's not a long-term rental.

Few people realize it, but most automobile policies cover you when driving a rented vehicle so long as the car hasn't been rented for a long term.

If you rent for under three weeks, that could hardly be considered a long term, but check with your insurance representative before leaving.

Innocent Until Proven Guilty

Richmond, Va. — About 100 people, black and white from 10 states, jammed the office of Gov. Linwood Holton here on December 21 to demand freedom for Thomas Wansley.

Wansley is a 27-year-old black man who spent 10 years in prison on a charge of raping a white woman in Lynchburg, Va., in 1962. He was freed on bond last January when a federal judge overturned his conviction; he was returned to prison in mid-November after a U.S. Court of Appeals reversed the January ruling.

The delegation to the governor included representatives of 20 national human rights organizations and 12 Virginia organizations, along with a number of black elected officials in Virginia.

The group brought petitions signed by 8,000 persons across the country. They said these had been collected in the last few weeks, and that thousands of signatures had been sent to the governor previously.

Walter Collins, executive director of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), read a joint statement from the group, which said: "We are here in behalf of all the black men who have been falsely accused of raping white women. Thomas Wansley is representative of all these victims of terror and repression. The Governor of Virginia can help to erase this stain from our country by pardoning Wansley or commuting his sentence to time served."

A delegation from Lynchburg, representing several groups which have worked 11 years for Wansley's freedom, presented a detailed position paper. Wansley's mother, Ms. Willie Mae Thornton, made a personal appeal that her son be freed before Christmas.

Among the Lynchburg delegation was Fletcher Hubbard, a popular disc jockey and manager of a black radio station, who set out on the previous day walking the 150 miles from Lynchburg to Richmond.

The group demanded to see Governor Holton in person but was told he was out of town. They met instead with David Bradley, a special assistant to the governor in charge of pardons. Finally, Bradley agreed to set up an appointment for Wansley's mother to see the governor.

Holton had met December 19 with representatives of several Virginia organizations who presented petitions signed by 7,000 persons within the state in recent weeks. He told this group that he was considering a pardon for Wansley but could not take into account three things: the fact that Wansley is black, the possibility of his innocence, or the many petitions for his freedom.

This statement was challenged during Bradley's session with the national delegation by the Rev. Milton Reid, pastor of New Calvary Baptist Church in Norfolk and a representative of the Interdenominational Foundation for Community Organizing (IFCO).

"I hope I heard wrong what the governor is reported to have said yesterday," Reid said. "During the past four years Governor Holton's administration has provided much hope to black people in Virginia. If he fails to act now on the Wansley case, these hopes will be destroyed." Holton leaves office January 12.

A young black woman from Virginia spoke up and said: "How can the governor say he won't consider the fact that Wansley is black when that's why he was sent to prison?"

Ms. Sallye Davis, of Birmingham, Ala., brought a message from her daughter, Angela Davis. Several white women spoke of the symbolic importance of the Wansley case in "destroying the myths about white womanhood that have enslaved white women as they oppressed black men."

Tom Gardner of the center for United Labor Action brought a message from black and white workers of Local 26 of the Distributive Workers of America. He said many white workers, like white women generally, are recognizing how they have been used and misused in the oppression of blacks by the powerful few who rule the South.

Queen Mother Moore, founder and president of the Universal Association of Ethiopian Women, spoke for that group. The Rev. Ben Chavis spoke for the Commission on Racial Justice of the United Church of Christ. Bernard Lee, a native Virginian, spoke for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Maurice Barbosa, aide to Rep. John Conyers of Michigan, brought appeals from Conyers and other members of Congress. A group from New York brought a statement signed by prominent people in that area.

The delegation stressed that freedom for Wansley would help other black men falsely accused of raping white women. They called particular attention to the case of James Carrington, now serving a 75-year sentence in Virginia; and three young black men recently sentenced to death in Tarboro, N.C.

The national delegation was organized by SCEF and the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Repression, in cooperation with the Virginia Prisoners Solidarity Committee, the Committee to Free Thomas Wansley and James Carrington, and the Wansley Defense Fund in Lynchburg.

The delegation urged people everywhere to continue to write to Gov. Linwood Holton, State Capitol, Richmond, Va. 23219.

VISIBILITY TIPS

A clean sweep from your car's windshield wipers is vital when it's raining or snowing.

The wipers should completely clear the area which they cross. If they leave the windshield smeared or streaked, they should be replaced. You wouldn't keep a mop which only half cleans the floor, and you shouldn't keep worn out wipers on the car.

Most windshield wipers are designed so that the rubber blade slips off for easy replacement. Some wipers, however, require both the blade and the wiper support to be removed.

Windshield washers need maintenance, too. You probably have discovered how useful the windshield washers can be for cleaning dirt and grime from the windshield.

Washers are practically indispensable in the winter when road salt is deposited on the windshield. You should carry a refill bottle of washer solution in the car.

Test the washers periodically to be sure they will work properly when you need them. If the fluid doesn't squirt out evenly to both sides of the glass, have a mechanic check the problem.

ALCOHOL, DRUG ABUSE, AND MENTAL HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

BY Sheila Carroll

Sixty heroin addicts in southeast Baltimore are participating in a project which combines two different treatment approaches — behavioral therapy and methadone maintenance — to determine if the combined treatment can help rehabilitate some addicts.

The project is being directed by Dr. George Bigelow and Dr. Alan Harris at the Baltimore City Hospital, under a contract with the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, one of six agencies of the Public Health Service.

A daily dose of the synthetic narcotic methadone is a widely used treatment for addiction. The behavioral approach is relatively new and to date has been limited to drug-free treatment programs. By combining the two, the investigators aim to determine the effectiveness of various forms of behavior therapy when used with addicts and their usefulness as adjuncts to methadone treatment.

For the study, the patients, who come from a white, blue-collar neighborhood in which the population is stable and family ties are strong, are divided into four groups of 15 each. All receive conventional methadone therapy: daily administration of the drug, urine tests to check on drug use, counseling, development of educational and vocational skills, job referral, and participation in social and recreational programs.

For the first group of 15, no additional therapy will be provided. The second group, will be trained in special techniques called "autogenic control procedures" — such as deep relaxation — to help them ease

Action: A Federal Agency Profile

WASHINGTON, D.C. ((C)) NMS. — Some legislators feel the Domestic Volunteer Service Act may be one of the most important measures enacted in Congress.

The measure authorizes ACTION to administer all of the country's domestic volunteer program, and to develop new programs and new ways to tap the volunteerism spirit that exists in the nation.

One of the supporters of the measure, Rep. William A. Steiger (R-Wis.) says that under the authority of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act, ACTION has launched a new national volunteer effort aimed at increasing community participation in solving local problems. ACTION operates in 13 states with nearly 50 volunteers. By July, 1974, about 300 are expected to be serving.

The program allows community groups to sponsor volunteers for one year by sharing the overall costs with ACTION. In this way, ACTION may place more of the thousands of highly education and motivated people, willing to serve, Steiger said.

It started as an experiment in volunteer cost-sharing with state and local governments, other federal agencies and private and non-public organizations. The volunteers supplement community efforts to tackle problems related to poverty environment.

ACTION volunteers in ACTION cooperative volunteers — ACV — are now in New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Nebraska, Nevada, Washington, D.C., Montana, Delaware, Minnesota, Louisiana, Hawaii, Maryland, and Oregon.

The program already has shown some signs of success. In Nebraska, for example, 11 volunteers in an adult basic education program are showing teachers how to re-design curriculums for low-level achievers are making course work more relevant and are producing recognizable results. In addition, they are recruiting and training volunteer tutors, setting up a summer education program, and helping establish a training center for Indians.

internal tension, anxiety, and depression, which have been suggested as contributing causes of drug abuse. If mastered, these techniques may serve as relaxing and enjoyable substitutes for drug use.

A third group will be treated using "contingency contracting," an approach which aims to modify behavior by rewarding or punishing specific behavior patterns in accordance with a contract between patient and the program. The general method is to set up contingencies under which a patient who becomes socially productive earns certain privileges, for example a reduction in the number of required visits to the clinic and telephone check-ins monitoring his activity. In addition, patients can earn tickets to local entertainment events and will be allowed to participate in social activities. Patients who miss appointments or relapse to drug use, on the other hand, suffer the consequences specified in the agreement, such as a general increase in supervision requiring more frequent clinic visits and a stricter day-to-day accountability to the program staff.

The remaining group of 15 patients will undergo both forms of behavior therapy along with the standard methadone treatment.

Throughout treatment, continuing assessment of the patients' progress will reveal whether behavior therapy is a useful supplement to methadone treatment, and if so, whether a single or combined form is most helpful.

This week we present Dolph Pulliam. Meet a young man with his finger in nearly a dozen civic pies; a 6-foot-6-inch, 195 lb., former basketball star who likes to cook, holder of a B.A. in speech and a minor in Radio/TV; a soft spoken man with a hearty laugh and a winning way with words, and you've just begun to know Dolph Pulliam, former Drake University standout forward and now a KRNT news reporter and broadcaster.

Upon graduation he was drafted by the Boston Celtics, but he wanted to stay in Des Moines and so declined. He sought and found employment with KRNT.

Dolph Pulliam

Actually Pulliam shared with me the true story of his early life. His father and mother died from carbon monoxide poisoning. They were seated in the family car awaiting the opening of church. It was a cold day and they had the car windows closed. Dolph was six years old. He was left with seven other children. There were two older brothers who took over. When the funeral was over and small matters attended to, the two older brothers packed a pillow case with each child's belongings and the eight went to the railroad tracks and the family of eight caught a freight train with Gary, Indiana as their goal. In Gary lived an aunt and uncle. They felt that they should be in a town with relatives. They did not plan living with the uncle and aunt, just living in the same town. They rode the freight to Missouri where they got off and took a bus to Gary. They barely had enough money.

In Gary they were received with open arms. However, the agencies felt they should be placed for adoption but the older brother who cared for them while the oldest brother worked, said no. The neighbors filled out a petition asking that they be allowed to remain together and that they be permitted to remain in their community. The agencies placed them in a project to live. They got along fine. About three years later the oldest brother, Charles, was killed in an auto accident. This left James at the head of the family. He managed beautifully and is still living in Gary.

Pulliam says he had two sisters. He recalls with laughter that it was Cora who had charge of himself, Melvin and Roosevelt on the trip North. She had the three little boys tied together with a rope and she held one end of the rope. This made for a safe journey with no one getting lost. Each child carried a pillow case with his belongings. The group referred to the pillow cases as their hobo sacks. It was a big accomplishment for the brothers to make such a trip, but I know it was real fun for the little boys to be hoboing. What little boys wouldn't give today to make such a trip? Not one would say no.

As we chatted Dolph commented that God was his friend. That he has always felt this way. During his motherless and fatherless childhood, God was his friend. And he talks to God just as he talked with me.

At this point he stated that he does not let discrimination trouble him. He does not expend his energies upon the things, the little things, that little people do. He does not burden his life with struggling over little people and little things.

When he was awarded a scholarship and in this way found his way to Drake University, he found a family who became his foster parents. I asked their names. He told me that they are Dr. and Mrs. Paul Vance. He laughed with such warmth in speaking of them. I felt that in view of his loss of parents, their including him in their lives came at the right time. He was away from the small family and needed to belong to someone. These two were the right people in his life.

He describes Black pride as wanting to be the best, to get the most out of one's life. He has carried this feeling always. In everything he does, he tries to do his best and to be the best in his undertaking.

Pulliam is said to travel at quite a pace. He's currently Vice-Chairman of the State Board of Social Services, Vice President of United Cerebral Palsy of Central Iowa, member Des Moines YMCA Board of Directors, Mid-Iowa Council of Boy Scouts, counselor to senior and junior high students for the Des Moines School system, member Iowa PTA, and Vice-President for Big Brothers of Des Moines. For the second year, he was the co-organizer of the Annual Red Cross Basketball Game which brings together from all over the country his teammates of 4 years ago. Last year Dolph received a National Recognition Award from Red Cross for this activity, and in past years, won service awards from the University of Iowa Medical Research Department, and the Tall Corn Area of Boy Scouts of America.

At KRNT, Dolph mans the news, camera, reports, writes and broadcasts on radio and TV. 1973 marked the beginning of "1-2-3", a new concept in realistic children's television. Dolph stars on the show and uses a "gentle" learning approach with young viewers.

Dr. Robert Burns, Volunteer Coordinator for HEALTHLINE, Iowa's first phone-in health information service, has announced that sponsors for HEALTHLINE have been scheduled up to February 1975. Health agencies who are interested in securing one of the few remaining weeks should call the Health Education Section of the Des Moines-Polk County Health Department immediately. The Des Moines-Polk County Health Department houses and coordinates HEALTHLINE.

The number of calls per week has grown to an average of 894 calls, with the highest week recorded as 1,990. HEALTHLINE has had 15,555 calls in its sixteen weeks of service.

For valuable health information, simply form the HEALTHLINE habit by calling 282-5255 once a week. Each Friday at 4:00 P.M. there is a different recorded message to hear, and each message is geared to inform people about general preventive health techniques to help them stay healthy. Day or night in the Des Moines calling area, HEALTHLINE can be dialed by six people simultaneously.

If interest continues, there is the possibility that HEALTHLINE may grow into a more complex medical and dental information system. Under such a system, a caller could hear any message from any subscriber at any time, instead of just the message being aired that particular week. At present, other cities which have the complex system are being studied to see if such a system will be feasible in Des Moines.

Gifts awaiting children's happy smiles.

Attitudes & Services-- Your Entertainment Dollar

New Year's Eve approaches, and most of us will be spending our money on celebrations of some sort. To celebrate properly, it is customary that we dress stylishly and step out into the streets for music, drink, and laughter. The more you laugh, the more you drink. The bigger your celebration, the bigger the evening's take for the owner of the club you're duty bound to patronize. Nobody but a very few likes to think politically every moment of the day, and political thought is understandably unwelcome on New Year's Eve. So why not knock yourself out on the night of Dec. 31st, and leave the troubling thoughts of oppression, racism and economic exploitation for the next day, a new year. As you nurse that hangover or kick yourself for some inane action brought on by the spirit of celebration, give a thought to how much money you spent, where you spent it, and most important, how much of that money will be "recycled" within the Black community so that it might do something for someone over and above the nightclub owner. That money isn't gone after you've spent it, it lives beyond your grasp and enriches the lives of others. The whole economy of this country is based upon the circulation of money; the whole economy of you is based upon how much money circulates throughout the Black community. Financial suicide was the 1973 rule of operation. 1974 ought to be a self-perpetuating year, where Black folks look out for themselves and circulate green among black, whenever possible.

Rap Session

By Mike Morrow

If you haven't heard HERBIE HANCOCK's "Head Hunters" by now, I really don't know where you have been. Hancock has again come up with another dynamite perspective on pop jazz. The key cut on the album is "Chameleon". Which will take you off with the use of a moog synthesizer. I wonder if Hancock will be able to outdo himself on his next album?

For some of that good dancing music, MAXAYN's new one "Mindful" is for you. There is a little something for everyone. From the style of early Sly Stone to an almost rip-off of Buddy Miles' adaptation of "Down by the River". Other than that there are some original cuts that are good listening.

Africans are into jazz, like most Black Americans are into soul, if you know what I mean. So if you want to hear some good, solid jazz along classical lines; then Africa produces the best. The most well known African jazz group to American audiences is OSIBASA (flying elephants and all.) Their efforts on their latest release, HAPPY CHILDREN, are good natured in content. It's a fair album, but in comparison to their previous albums there could have been more done.

James Brown's "Payback" is just James Brown "Payback". Godfather of Soul or not — Brown is still coming down with his same tried and true formula. "Payback" is just another gold album to add to the collection.

THE 24-CARAT BLACK's "Ghetto: Misfortune's Wealth", is an excellent album, no two ways about it. The lyrics you can really get into. But if you just listen to music and not the lyrics you will still enjoy it.

Sahel Africa, Says Thanks To America

A close victory occurred last week as the Senate passed the Foreign Aid Bill which included $25 million to the Sahel.

The following is a part of a speech by the President of Upper Volta, Sangoule Lamizana, presented to the House of Representatives.

I should like to thank you, through you, the American people whom you are privileged to represent and who have generously expressed their solidarity with the peoples of the Sahel, sorely tried by a drought lasting for several years.

In order to attend to the most pressing needs, the local governments mobilized the feeble means at their disposal and appealed for national solidarity. The response has been affirmative but incapable of meeting the needs that must be met.

Our experts, our cabinet ministers, and then the Chiefs of State of the six countries met at Ouagadougou to consider the entire range of measures to be taken. At the conclusion of their work, they unanimously adopted an action program divided into three parts:

Emergency measures to meet the food needs of men and animals by establishing emergency reserves for the years ahead; National programs; and Action falling under the heading of regional cooperation. Alone we can never realize from our own resources the financial means necessary for execution of that program.

The American people have made sacrifices a thousand times greater in other situations. We hope that their contribution will be in proportion to their greatness. History drew us together under sad circumstances, and then estranged us. It now brings us together once again in a world which is becoming increasingly smaller. It is, perhaps, first of all, a question of saving our people from famine, but it is above all a question of helping them to rebuild their producing capital so that they may in future be worthy social, cultural, and economic partners of the American people.

History decreed that Africa, and especially Sahelian African, should provide its men and its blood to build the developed countries. Is it not fair that those countries should lend their support today to rebuild Sahelian Africa?

There has been an unquestionable expression of interest here in the problems of the Sahel, and I should like to take this opportunity to thank all the private organizations that have been created to mobilize funds and good will for the purpose of helping our people.

Greatness entails obligations. You represent a great people. Because of the feelings that motivate you, you can help to arouse American public opinion to assist us in winning the difficult battle we are waging against hunger, thirst, and poverty in order to give the people of the Sahel renewed reason to live and to hope.

Stars In Profile

—Four black-star actors are caught in an unusual profile photograph as they work in a church scene in "Uptown Saturday Night," a comedy film revolving around the adventures and misadventures of two buddies, Sidney Poitier and Bill Cosby, who seek to apprehend the bandits who held them up in an after hours club. Shown left to right are: Cosby, Poitier, Harry Belafonte, and Calvin Lockhart. The film is being made in Hollywood by Poitier's company, Verdon Productions, for First Artists. Poitier wears three hats as Executive Producer, Director, and acting star. Mel Tucker is the producer. "Uptown Saturday Night" will be released through Warner Bros.

Furor Over Taveres' Television Program

American Bandstand, that veteran mainstay of the teeny bopping area of television land, recently became inadvertently involved in a major controversy.

It seems that the day their nationally broadcasted show that featured Capitol recording stars, Taveres, went out across T.V. land, that of all things, it was pre-empted in New Bedford, Massachusetts.

So what, you say? Well, it would not be that important except for the little communities in accordance with the volume of construction work there. The State Joint Bricklayer Apprenticeship Committee pointed out that numbers of apprentices from previous years will not necessarily be a guide for 1974.

Students who complete the school will enter a four year apprenticeship program which, if completed, will result in journeyman status for the student. The school will consist of both mechanical training and related classroom work.

fact that the five young brothers who make up the group all, as they say, hail from New Bedford.

So, the results of attempting to black-out some home town bloods who had made good, and who, with their recording, "Check It Out," had one of the hottest singles in the country, was fairly predictable. A flood of angry phone calls and telegrams greeted the station manager of WTEV-TV after it was discovered by the home town fans the nerve that some people have.

Finally, the station manager had enough of the irate fans and decided to hold a special showing on December 8 of the American Bandstand show that featured Taveres. Now, old buddies and young aspiring street corner singers who remembered when Taveres "were just some of the boys" will be able to see them once more in living color. And once more, there is peace in television land and peace in New Bedford.

New Health Care Plan Unveiled

(C) NMS. — A mandatory health insurance — one that would replace the Medicaid and Medicare programs — is being readied by the Nixon administration.

Just like a previous proposal, which never got favorable consideration from Congress, the proposal would just about get the government out of the health care business, except for the poor and those with low incomes.

The proposal would provide for a total takeover by the federal government of state Medicaid programs for families on welfare.

It is the total takeover of Medicaid that causes Black politicians in Washington to worry. Should the administration decide to impound funds for their health care, every American, except the poor, would be protected.

Under the administration's plan, private insurance companies would provide the coverage with the premium costs paid mainly by the employer. Employers would be required to offer a basic insurance plan, picking up 65 percent of the tab for the first three years and 75 percent later.

Workers would pay 25 percent of the cost and the government would pay 10 percent for the first three years and would end its payment after that period.

The proposal is to go to Congress in January.

Services that would be offered would include:

* Physical, hospital and prescription drug costs with no limit, except on certain preventative services and

Police Search Authority Upheld By The Supreme Court

NMS. — The Supreme Court has upheld the broad power of police to conduct complete searches of their arrest victims, a measure that will give law enforcers a license to harass the Black public.

The court indicated that it would not question the scope of police searches that accompany an arrest, except for the "most extreme and patently abusive intrusions."

The court, ruling on cases from the District of Columbia and Florida, by a 6 to 3 vote held that police who have an individually lawfully in custody do not need to justify a search of his pockets, collar, waistband, and socks as authorized by police regulations.

The court leaves it to the policeman to determine if an individual's actions warrant arrest, the most glaring loophole and the one most likely for abuse.

But the ruling is unlike the "stop-and-frisk" situation where a policeman is merely suspicious of a citizen. That is till a violation of personal privacy. Still, the officer does not need to justify that he has fear of a hidden weapon, or that he suspects that he is in danger of losing perishable evidence.

What the ruling leaves open more importantly is the chance that law-respecting citizens are left to total degradation should a policeman arrest them on a minor driving charge or a trivial misdemeanor. The search could be conducted at any point during the arrest in full view of friends or family.

Supreme Court justices reversed a standing 5 to 4 decision of the United States Court of Appeals from Oct. 1972 that would have imposed "stop-and-frisk" limitations to searches after traffic arrests.

Besides giving arresting officers wider leeway in handling street encounters with "suspects," the decision also takes a more liberal view of what the officer's conduct should be expected to be.

Defense counsel will have to show practically outrageous police to suppress any evidence on grounds of illegal seizure.

Some Black Leaders Identify With Fate Of Jews

(C) NMS, 1973) — Asking the United States to assure the survival of Israel, some elected Black officials across the country claim identification with the Jewish state's fight for survival in the Middle East.

In a "Black Pledge of Solidarity with Israel", 19 Black officials — including Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles, Rep. Ralph Metcalfe of Illinois, Rep. Charles Rangel of New York and Mayor Jap Cooper of Pritchard, Ala. — have claimed that their views on the subject represent "missions of Black and White Americans."

No statistics, however, support the claim.

"Out of our background in the struggle for human rights," the statement asserts, "we of the Black community identify with Israel's struggle for survival, as a nation in the Mideast, with our own fight for freedom here in America."

The statement also says that it understands how Jews worldwide feel about Israel, inferring that it is not unlike how Blacks all over the globe feel about Africa.

Noting that the "only" Jewish state in the world has turned a desert into an oasis and a power nation, the statement expresses hope that after the recent Mideast war Israel will live long and prosper...

"All nations of the world, including the Arab nations, must accept the reality that Israel's right as a sovereign state cannot be abridged or weakened and it must have and maintain borders that are viable to assure its security." The drafters of the statement avoided Black public officials in the northeastern section of the country.

by Allen Ashby

This is the time when we are supposed to review the year that is just about over and try to pick out the most outstanding events. Sometimes that is easy, and sometimes it is quite a feat. To begin with, I would have to call the two fights that Muhammad Ali had with Ken Norton as the most surprising of the stories. There isn't anyone who hasn't heard about them. Then there was George Frazier who swatted his chin against the fist of George Foreman hard enough to kiss the canvas, and so we had a new heavyweight champ, and, that, along with Ali's tussle with Norton, blew what might have been the biggest fight gate in boxing history, even bigger than the Frazier-Ali battle. Of course you would have to rate the chase by Hank Aaron after the home run mark of the immortal Babe Ruth as the most standout continuous story. The fellow pulled up one short of the mark at the end of the year, and people might have said he was fed a good ball on the last day if he had done it then.

This was also the year when black colleges began to be seen on television football games. They ranked high in the small college poles, Tennessee State being rated number one, and Grambling, and Alcorn in the top twenty. But I have to ask if State was number one, how come they didn't get into the playoffs for the ultimate championship? I recall seeing that question raised during the setting up of the playoffs, and the answer was that the school chosen instead of State had played a tougher schedule. Then, why weren't they number one? Was disappointed at Grambling's game in the thing, because I believe they were a better team than they showed that day. The dominance of black players in the major conferences, including the two main southern ones isn't news any more, but I would have to call Conridge Holloway just about the best quarterback I saw all year, aside from Michigan's Dennis Franklin.

The most unique situation in the news was the Ohio State Michigan battle for Big Ten and Rose Bowl honors. For the first time in the memory of anybody, the two opposing quarterbacks were black, and both were the main boys in their team's offense. And at Iowa we had a couple of black quarterbacks who had to prove themselves several times over before they got the recognition they should have had. And Iowa State had two fine black signal callers who will both be back next year. This would have to be the year of the black quarterback.

So many things happened around here that I hesitate to try to choose an outstanding one. There was the fine Tech basketball team that still believes they were officiated out of the city title. And there were so many black runners and jumpers in the Drake Relays that one couldn't pick one. But I remember one Curtis Craig in the high school sprints who became a star halfback for Davenport Central. He was featured in a recent issue of Sports Illustrated magazine, telling about his role in the high school playoff game with Dowling in which he literally ran wild. I would have discounted the strong feeling by Tech supporters and players about their team if it hadn't been for the rather underhanded method the public schools employed to try to get Dowling out of the Metro Conference because they won too many football games.

For the first time in its history, the Hilltop Open tennis meet got the publicity it deserved, and this was because it happened to be the only meet held in the city, so everybody who wanted to play in a meet here got into it. Then we hit the jackpot in titles. I have played down the race angle of the thing since its beginning, but I must confess a warm inner glow when Mark Morrow, Ester Myers and Royal Madison of Chicago either won or were runnerups in most of the final matches. Mark grabbed two crowns, the men's singles and half of the men's doubles, playing what had to be the finest tennis he played all year. Esther regained her women's singles title, and we had more champions than we had in all the rest of the meets put together. There may have been other happenings that I have forgotten, but these will do until I can think of some more. Why didn't I mention Iowa U.? You know the answer to that one.

Study Finds 13.1 Million Families Lack Proper Homes

By Gerome Grier
NMS

A two year housing study has found that 13.1 million low and moderate-income families, about twice as previously suspected, are living in households that are structurally unsound, overcrowded, or too expensive.

The study, conducted by the Harvard-MIT Joint Center for Urban Studies, predicted that 23 million new housing units would be built before 1980, but that it would not be enough to accommodate those described as deprived of housing.

The units would provide living space for people who can pay their own way in the housing market, but additional housing would be needed for the poor. Their needs could be met only by additional units.

Some of the families would be able to improve their lot by moving into the homes vacated by those who take up residence in the 23 million new units, not an uncommon practice as authenticated by the poor who traditionally have had to take what housing was available as the upper strata of society progressed to the suburbs.

The study made no recommendations, but it showed clearly that no single national housing program could work

Kodak College Division I All-American Team

Baltimore, Md. — Eugene "Superman" Simms, Morgan State College's "super" linebacker, topped the list of defensive performers named to the Kodak College Division I All-American team.

The 22-man squad was chosen by the American Football Coaches Association.

Simms, a 6-2, 228-pound junior, who was named Player-of-the-year in the strong Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference (MEAC), was earlier named to the Associated Press Little All-America and the Houston (Tex.) Forward Times' Black College All-America elevens. The Washington, D.C. native led the Morgan State defense, which ranked 3rd nationally among NCAA Division II schools in rushing defense, which ranked 3rd nationally among NCAA Division II schools in rushing defense, with a total of 86 tackles in 9 games, 6 deflected passes, one fumble recovery and one interception.

effectively in all areas of the country.

But currently there is no on-going national housing program. Most of funds appropriated by Congress for housing subsidies and low and moderate-income housing development have been tied up since the President imposed a "stoppage" in January.

The President said in a Sept. 19 message to Congress that giving housing allowances or direct cash payments to the poor "appears a policy that would work." What the poor have now instead of more housing is a study to determine if cash allowances would be better.

What has been accomplished for other groups needing homes is a raise in the ceiling of both VA and conventional loan interest rates, and a similar measure that increased the amount of money that the VA and FHA could guarantee for home loans.

The study also found that dilapidated housing was causing low and moderate-income families to live under a "high rent burden" in their flight to find suitable living conditions. As much as 25 to 35 percent of their incomes are going for rent.

Proper insulation will help you keep warm this winter and cut your heating bills too. And next summer it'll help keep you cool and comfortable. It's that simple!

Scout's Honor

According to a 16th century surveyor, the way to find what a foot stood for was to line up 16 men, measure their left feet and take the average.

How To Get More For Your Dollars

Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz today (Dec. 18) announced publication of a guide to help families use their incomes to best advantage.

"Handbook for the Home", the new Yearbook of Agriculture, "suggests ways that families can live fuller, more secure, and more satisfying lives, and helps them avoid costly pitfalls of all kinds," the Secretary says in a Foreword to the volume.

"It gathers a great wealth of consumer material into some 400 compact pages. This is a book for families. It centers around the home — Whether home is a suburban house, a country place, or a city apartment."

"The more knowledgeable consumers this nation has," Secretary Butz notes, "the better will be our way of life."

"Handbook for the Home" contains 78 chapters, more than 190 photographs, and is based mainly on Federal or State research. The hardback book is on sale for $5.70 from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. In addition each member of Congress has a limited number of copies for free distribution to constituents.

The Agriculture Department has no copies for public distribution or sale.
