NAACP Freedom Fund Banquet: Hooks Speaks

By Stephanie L. Michael freelance writer

The Des Moines Branch of the NAACP will be sponsoring a "Freedom Fund Banquet," Friday, September 9, 1977 at 7 p.m., at the Des Moines Hilton Inn, 6111 Fleur Drive.

The banquet is to celebrate the local branch's sixty-two years of service to the community of Des Moines, and the long, effective history of quality leadership in civil rights.

The anniversary event will feature the new National Executive Director Benjamin L. Hooks, who will make known some of his future plans for the national organization as a whole.

The banquet message to be brought by Hooks will stress the NAACP National Organizations new slogan, "Our New Day Begun," words taken from the Black National Anthem, written by James Weldon Johnson.

Young adults as well as older adult members of the NAACP are planning day and night activities for the entire community's involvement on Friday, September 9th. Various committees have begun to solicit help from Des Moines residents in preparing menus to finding young adult host and hostesses.

Members of the Des Moines Branch of the NAACP want their sixty-second anniversary to be celebrated by the entire Des Moines area, hopefully marking further co-operation and more aggressive action by the group on problems facing citizens in the community.

For more information on the NAACP "Freedom Fund Banquet," contact Vincent Chapman at 225-4117, between 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday thru Friday or Leonard Johnson at 278-4512 after 5 p.m.

Carter Reacts to Criticism From Urban League's Jordon

This week President Jimmy Carter faced his harshest criticism by a Black leader when Executive Director of the National Urban League Vernon Jordon said the administration has not moved fast enough to promote racial and economic equality.

But at the Urban League's annual conference on Monday, Carter replied he had "no apologies to make" about his administration's progress in these areas and in a private talk with Jordon said he, the cabinet and the Democratic Congress all have genuine interest in poor people and that statements that argue to the contrary are "damaging to the hopes and aspirations of poor people."

Jordon's attack on the administration came Sunday when he said, "the sad fact is that the list of what the administration has not done (for cities and blacks) far exceeds its list of accomplishments."

Jordon attacked the administrations welfare reform proposals and questioned the administration's commitment to helping the poor. "We have no full employment policy; we have no welfare reform policy; we have no national health policy; we have no urban revitalization policy."

"Black people and poor people resent the stress on

Glanton Sentenced In Arson Case

Luther Glanton III, son of Polk Co. District Court Judge Luther Glanton Jr. and Des Moines lawyer W. Stevenson Glanton, was sentenced to serve not more than 20 years in prison following his conviction for arson.

District Judge A.V. Hass, who was brought to Des Moines to try this case, sentenced Glanton after a jury on May 19 found Glanton guilty of intentionally setting a fire in a house at 1125 11th St. on Feb. 22.

Hass ordered the prison term be served at the Iowa Men's Reformatory at Anamosa.

VIEWS and REVIEWS

President Carter and Vernon Jordan Both Right in Dialogue

In a speech before the National Urban League of which he is the director Vernon Jordan, criticized President Carter for reneging on his campaign promises to relieve the plight of Negroes who were instrumental in deciding his election.

Stunned by the statement, President Carter appeared before the convention the next day and pointed out that he is carrying out his promises. He said that he has directed most of his efforts toward the higher positions in his administration. He feels that this should be done in order that they have a voice in making the policies. He also stated that as time went on more effort would be directed toward those in the larger cities, in particular, where the unemployment rate is still exceedingly high. He said that he will insist that the Civil Rights laws be enforced.

It is understandable that Jordan would make the charges remembering that President Carter pledged to tackle these problems as one of the first moves in his administration.

President Carter got a big hand from the audience. He deserved it. But no doubt he will give more attention to the matters of which Jordan complained because the unemployed is still crying for work.

Iowa Calls Chief Justice Berger's Bluff

Contrary to a statement by the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court made in his dissent of the Williams case, that he did not believe Williams would be retired, the bench and bar and the Polk County Board of Supervisors have proven that he was far off in his statement.

Judge Hanrahan appointed three excellent lawyers to defend Williams and as the trial proceeded every request made to the court which would enhance the defense of Williams was granted. The trial proceeded in an orderly fashion.

No move to appeal the case has been made so far. However it is satisfying that the bench and bar conducted the trial in an orderly manner and the people of Iowa should be proud that it can say to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court that justice and proper legal proceedings prevail in this state, even though a case may be offensive.

Lack of Money Looms Big In Redlining

A group of citizens, interested in the so-called redlining problem in financing and selling real estate, along with representatives from several loan agencies met at Edmunds School to discuss the problem.

Few people who had actually been denied financing made complaints, but judging from the large crowd which attended many of them had experienced such disappointment.

The representatives from the loan agencies denied that they followed such practice in their institutions relying solely on the security of the borrower and, also, his credit and showing that the loan would be paid.

At one time, no savings and loan associations made loans to minorities in Des Moines. However, prior to World War II, one company was organized whose policy restricted no one who met the qualifications announced by the representatives present. Later, as the government placed pressure on companies and the general attitude of observing civil rights began to make headway other loan companies began to fall in line.

But even today some of these companies will not loan in a mixed neighborhood; some not at all.

As I told the group, one of the greatest obstacles to be considered was the fact that most of these people, both white and black are in the lower bracket of employment and therefore in these high priced times find it difficult to stretch their paychecks over all the bills they undertake. In fact, this is true with a lot of people who make good salaries, but use poor judgment incurring obligations and thus find themselves unable to meet them. The bankruptcy courts and mortgage foreclosures furnish the best evidence of that fact.

Negroes are living throughout the city, some in very fine homes. They are paying their obligations and keeping up their homes and, of course, this is the best way to demonstrate that they are good neighbors and make every effort to maintain these homes so as to prevent them from deteriorating and thus becoming a blight in the neighborhood.

EDITORIAL

Minorities and The Minimum Wage

Historically, minorities have looked to policies of the Federal government as a means of overcoming the inequities of our society. The positive results of legislative, executive and judicial actions on behalf of America's Black and other minorities are well documented. But, there comes a time when we should seriously question the real impact of programs and policies on the nation's underprivileged.

Such a bill that should be questioned in light of present economics is H.R. 3744 — which would (a) increase the Federal minimum wage from $2.30 to $2.85 per hour; (b) index the minimum wage to 60 percent of the average manufacturing wage, and (c) eliminate the tip credit allowance which allows the combination of salary and tips to at least equal the minimum wage.

At a time when the U.S. is combating both high inflation and unemployment rates — some 37 percent for minority youth — the impact of H.R. 3744 could adversely affect unskilled workers — particularly Black teenagers.

If anybody can be called the "employer of the first resort," as compared to the Federal government being, as some suggest the "employer of the last resort," it has to be the foodservice (restaurant) industry, whose 550,000 independent operators, and a growing number of Black entrepreneurs, employ more than 8 million people in full-time and part-time capacities, many of them younger unskilled workers in entry-level positions.

While teenagers make up only 10 percent of the nation's workforce, they constitute a third of the foodservice workforce.

The impact of a higher minimum wage was contained in a study for industry by Dr. Andrew F. Brimmer, a former Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and an economist now heading his own firm in Washington, D.C., who says that evidence is mounting which demonstrates that as legal minimum wages have climbed, the adverse effect on the young has become increasingly clear. The burden falls primarily on young unskilled workers — and particularly on Black teenagers. Yet, public perception and beliefs still adhere to the contrary view, that increases in the minimum wage have no detrimental effects.

If the tip credit is repealed, a system that ensures total income to every worker at least equal to the minimum wage, employers would immediately face more than doubling in labor costs for tipped employees — that is, loss of the present $1.15 credit plus the 24 percent increase over the current minimum wage.

What would happen? According to the National Restaurant Association, some 700,000 foodservice jobs would be lost if restaurant operators cut employment to keep their labor costs constant. Additional wages would cost some $3.9 billion, which could only be met by cutting personnel or raising menu prices, or both.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce estimates that passage of H.R. 3744 would cause nationwide employment opportunities in all industries to be reduced by 2.7 million jobs.

Led by organized labor, a number of civil rights leaders have been enlisted in the effort to raise the minimum wage to $3.00 an hour. Undoubtedly, participants in the new coalition are well-motivated but they should be cognizant of the evidence that they may be strengthening the barriers to minority youth employment.

No longer, says retiring NAACP Executive Director, Roy Wilkins, can Black people in the nation sit in blind support of institutional policies of historical merit. As Wilkins says, "The Black man has built too many houses, too many bridges, too many railroads, too many ships to make America free, not to be free himself. We are able to read, write, cypher, and do the work of any true intellectual and scholar for anyone to have to defend our rights to equality and freedom...."

Letter to City Council

Mayor Olson, Councilmen, and concerned citizens:

Last week, in these council chambers, we witnessed a very unfortunate and unnecessary event. Two near-northside groups were fighting over what in all fairness are needed facilities: a promised park and housing, and a promised new urban campus.

This is not the exception to the rule — it has happened many times before. In fact, it is a part of city policy. Residents are pitted against each other to fight over much-needed services. Whenever really big dollars are involved, neighborhoods are duped into playing right into the city's plans, believing the many promises, yet all the while helping the city government fulfill their own personal promises to the big dollar interest.

The clearest example of this type of injustice is what is known as the R-40 project. Millions of taxpayer dollars were used to clear out residents in the neighborhoods near the downtown business district. Residents were led to believe that upon the clearing of their older homes, opportunities to resettle into their old neighborhood would be available. Today, the deception is glaringly apparent. Who from the old neighborhood can afford to finance a thirty to forty thousand dollar home? The R-40 project was a sham, a modern-day Indian treaty — you take the red man's land, make them promises, then change the terms of the treaty.

Last week two groups of citizens appealed to you — one group pleaded with the council — to keep its promises of housing and a park in their neighborhood. The other group pleaded for land so that they and their children can have an opportunity for a higher education in their neighborhood. Both groups can and should be satisfied. It is a crime when we residents of impoverished areas must choose between two necessities.

The model cities area is a key neighborhood in the whole redlined belt which surrounds the downtown area. The cities lack of input into this area greatly increases the tide of deterioration. To this date, city policy has been to build a new south of University and to ignore north of University. It is clear that the city is not satisfied with the land they stole in the R-40 area; they want the land north of University to deteriorate so they can confiscate it, too.

Last Monday, Mayor Olson told me personally that he was opposed to the Urban campus being located where old Dowling now exists. The area is deteriorating, he said. In other words, he is not willing to take a positive step to stop that deterioration.

The R-40 residents deserve their promised housing and park, and the low-income and minority residents of this community deserve their much-needed Urban campus. Let the people have their park and start building the low-income housing that was promised to the R-40 area. If you are going to give land away with the peoples money, then buy the old Dowling complex and build a new Urban campus and neighborhood center. A new facility built north of University will be a step in treating the cavity before the tooth must be pulled.

Citizens of the near north side, I am issuing an urgent call for unity. These proposals I have presented will force the city to show the people where they stand in relation to our deteriorating neighborhood. Will they sit idly by while our community deteriorates, then commit wholesale demolition and confiscation? Or will they start now to end the decay before it reaches the critical stage? Unite with me in support of these proposals so that we may meet the needs of our entire community.

I, Kalonji Lumumba Saudiq, am not waiting for my election to the city council to present solutions to pressing problems. I propose as a motion to be voted on by the council after a one week study that the following measures be implemented:

1. That the park and low-income housing that was promised the residents of the R-40 area be built.

2. That old Dowling be bought and a new Urban campus be formed, building new structures and possibly rehabilitating some of the old ones.

3. That a substantial amount of the 1978 Community Development budget be allocated to the area north of University for the purpose of rehabilitation of existing housing and building low to moderate priced single family dwellings on the many vacant lots.

Gentlemen, if you sincerely have the best interests of the taxpayers and low income residents at heart you will adopt these short-term measures. Furthermore, in the long run, you must press for progressive homesteading and urban land development programs that will allow inner-city residents to acquire and preserve single family residences. This is essential if you are at all concerned about curbing urban decay.

Attack Water Board

The administrator of the Des Moines Water Works Department has declared a "crisis" in providing adequate water to our community. The panic button has been pushed by Mr. King, general manager of this department. The use of water can not be used as needed but mandatory restrictions will be dictated or the water will be disconnected even though you are currently in payment of the bill. (Editor's Note: the mandatory restrictions have been lifted since this letter was written.)

Our short period of voluntarily conserving water is not adequate to prevent this crisis in water shortage. It is now necessary to enforce restrictions because the situation arises from an act of God and not by the lack of community planning and trustee short sightedness. It is not important that the restrictions will cost the people of the community thousands of dollars for loss of shrubbery, greenery, vegetable gardens, air comfort, swimming pool use, safety and protection of physical property in case of fire.

Our community should not tolerate the above positions of the public water service company.

Is it not the requirement that our community hire competent personnel whose job is to abort the need to force the restriction of the use of water service which is his task to assure an adequate supply? After all, the consumer has to pay any amount which is assessed for service provided.

Cyclical annual drought periods are not new phenomenon. They are to be anticipated and gave birth to the concept of water reservoirs. Reservoirs are defined as a natural or artificial lake or on developed to supply the needs of a community when water is stored for use, i.e. not restricted use.

Water conservation should be thought of as the planned use of dams reservoirs, channeling of streams, well digging and other engineered structures established to provide water as needed for modern purposes without waste. Community planners, state and federal conservationists undoubtedly are not cooperating with the community to ascertain this end.

Furthermore, there has been an attempt by the Des Moines Water Works General Manager, Maurice King, to dramatize the crisis by stating that an hour to hour monitor of the present supply of water is now being made arriving at the conclusion that the flow of 43 cubic feet per second at Van Meter is a proper evaluation. Let's face the facts. The velocity of the river flow will vary at any substantial given length of the river. Several points of detection of velocity is necessary during a rainfall period.

Our community must establish a committee to investigate the administration of the water needs over a seven year period—the period established by old timers—as the drought cyclical periods. If the water company personnel do not think this to be scientific, they should develop the data by surveys which is necessary to assure that sanitary water restrictions are not necessary. They should provide a water system which will provide needed water to a modern society. If they are incapable to establish such a system, new trustee board members should be assigned to this task.

We the people of this community must accept some of the responsibility for our lack of water supply as the crisis exists because of our neglect to ascertain that the city has qualified personnel in the Des Moines Department of Water Works to provide the services for which they are hired. An adequate water supply will insure that the community will have, without restrictions, water for drinking, foods, entertaining, bathes, sanitation, entertainment, comfortabilities of air, reservoirs, fire and property protections, and other enjoyments and necessities of the high standard of living in modern societies.

Malcolm Hogan, 4302 Wakonda Parkway, Des Moines, Chairman of the Steering Committee for Prevention of Water Shortages.

Challenges Hiring Policy

To the Editor:

"The Newspaper Iowa Depends Upon". If you've never seen that slogan in print look for it just below the headline of the largest morning newspaper in the state. Such a decree could mean a variety of things to many people. George Broadus of 102 Hull Street here in Des Moines has found a special meaning in that slogan. George feels he can depend upon the Des Moines Register and Tribune to utilize racial discrimination in its employment practices.

George has been employed by the newspaper for over twenty-one years as a janitor. The last ten of those years as an assistant foreman in the night maintenance department. George is also black. Maintenance Departments are traditional areas of employment for Blackmen but that was never a problem with George. He always believed a man had to start somewhere. George was never led to believe that his work or his supervisory ability was unsatisfactory until the Head Foreman—a whiteman, retired June 1st. It was assumed by most of the men in the department that George would be offered the position of Head Foreman. The Production Department had always filled top positions by promoting either the man who was second in-charge or at least a man with the highest seniority in the department. George Broadus filled both of those qualifications. The men were wrong. Production Management passed over George and placed another whiteman as Head Foreman. A man with no janitorial background and considerably less supervisory experience than George.

The Iowa Civil Rights Commission feels the situation deserves their consideration. A complaint has been drafted, signed, and turned over to Commission investigators. Named in the complaint are the Des Moines Register and Tribune, Don Grimm, Maintenance Superintendent, and Bill Duff, Head Day Maintenance Foreman.

The Register and Tribune has been a strong supporter of Civil Rights and fair employment practices in the past. How will they justify the inequity dealt to George Broadus? Iowa "depends upon" a fair settlement.

Vincent Carter

* Editor's Note: The New Iowa Bystander will print all or part of the letters To The Editor. However criticisms of the Register and Tribune should be addressed to them but since this is a matter of employment we feel that it should be published. Mr. Broadus' union should follow through with this matter.

The words of praise cannot replace the works of faith. This lesson was given last Sunday by Evangelist Zora Reed in her lesson, "Each Will Give Account of Himself Before God." Every talent we have has been given to us by God to be used to help Him and not ourselves. We can easily say what God has done for us, but let us also be able to say what we have done for God.

Messiah Temple is spending this week in prayer and meditation as we prepare for a Spirit-filled revival. The revival will begin July 31 and will last the whole week. We will meet at 7:00 each evening to be fed, filled, and healed by the Holy Spirit of God.

This revival is to renew the Spirit in us and to save lost souls so we will not be taking up an offering. Come and see what the Lord has done and is continuing to do in this soul-saving and renewing revival. Brother Earlan Bell will be speaking as the Lord gives him utterance.

Black Catholic Group Seeks New Director

The recent resignation of Brother Joseph M. Davis, S. M., as executive director of the National Office of Black Catholics (NOBC) has precipitated a nationwide search for a replacement.

Davis, who had been the seven-year-old Black Catholic organization's co-founder and only executive director, resigned this June to take a post with his Community, the Society of Mary (Marianists), in Cincinnati, as the Provincial assistant for Education.

According to Walter T. Hubbard, of Seattle, president of NOBC's Board of Directors, a Search Committee, headed by Ms. Anna Johnson, of Baltimore, will recruit and screen applicants for the post.

There are one million Black Catholics in the United States. The National Office for Black Catholics was founded July 1, 1970 for the "development and progress of the Catholic Church in the Black community." It set about implementing this by attempting to make the Church more relevant to Blacks through bringing about fuller participation, more proportionate representation in the hierarchy and by having the Church shed its traditional "missionary attitude" towards Blacks.

INEQUITIES

In 1970, the hierarchy had been 100% lily-white, with the exception of Auxiliary Bishop Harold Perry (New Orleans)...Until 1930, during the country's first 150 years, there had been just 10 Black priests — each had been forced to get his training abroad...Many churches had barred Blacks or had seated them in "jim-crow" sections.

Through such programs

SUCCESSOR SOUGHT

Brother Joseph M. Davis, S.M., co-founder and only executive director of the seven-year-old National Office for Black Catholics (the Washington, D.C.-based advocate organization of America's one million Black Catholics).

His recent resignation to take the post of assistant for Education with his Order, the Society of Mary (Marianists) in Cincinnati, has precipitated a nation-wide search for a successor. Applicants are invited to contact Ms. Anna Johnson, chairperson of the NOBC Search Committee, 3202 Baker St., Baltimore Md. 21216.

as: Pastoral Ministry (acquainting White priests with emerging attitudes of pride and awareness among Blacks); revising the liturgy to include the Black experience; seminars, lectures, workshops, conferences, publications, pamphlets, posters, films film strips produced by the organization, and through concerted efforts to keep parochial schools open and up to standards in the Black community, NOBC has labored to make the Catholic Church more meaningful to Blacks.

RESULTS

After seven years of NOBC's existence, the number of Black Bishops has increased to four, including a newly-installed Ordinary, Bishop Joseph L. Howze, head of the Diocese of Biloxi; the number of Black priests has increased to over 250. Most important has been the subtle changes in the attitudes of both factions: a heightened sense of pride, dignity and awareness among Black Catholics, and increased respect and an erosion of the "missionary attitude" among White Catholics.

According to Ms. Johnson, the job is "a demanding one, requiring, in addition to professional and administrative training and experience, a sense of dedication and devotion, such as that displayed by Brother Davis."

Candidates are invited to write for an application blank to: Ms. Anna Johnson, 3202 Baker Street, Baltimore, Maryland 21216.

Drake to give credit for television series

Drake University is offering a college credit course to accompany the John Kenneth Galbraith television series "The Age of Uncertainty" which will be broadcast over the Iowa Public Broadcasting Network at various times beginning 7 p.m., September 19.

The six-meeting course will give persons in the community an opportunity to follow specially-designed study materials and discuss with classmates the information offered by Galbraith in the television series.

Three hours of graduate or undergraduate college credit will be available to persons taking the course which will meet from 9:15 to 11:15 a.m. Saturdays at appropriate intervals during the series. Leading the sessions will be Dr. Dale A. Berry, professor and chairman of the department of economics.

Participants in Drake's course will watch the 13 programs of the series at home each week.

The series is comprised of Galbraith's personal look at the development of modern economic thought.

Taking an eclectic, interdisciplinary approach, Galbraith examines the ideas of Adam Smith, Ricardo, Malthus, Marx, Spencer, Veblen, Lenin, and Keynes in historical context.

Then, in light of this background, he addresses himself to such current concerns as the state of our cities, multinational corporations, the arms race, and the global issue of food in relation to population.

For enrollment information on "The Age of Uncertainty" course, call Drake's College for Continuing Education at 271-2181 or long distance toll free at 1-800-362-2416.

With increasing costs, it's senseless to waste energy.

So we've prepared a new booklet — "The Do-It-Yourself Energy Inventory" — which shows how wisely, or wastefully, your home uses energy. The booklet tells how to audit your home to spot energy "leaks" ... and how to plug them up.

The Energy Inventory is easy, and takes only a few minutes to do. The whole family can join in, and it will give each family member a better idea of the importance of using energy wisely.

Conflicting Busing Testimony Heard In Desegregation Case

U.S. District Court Judge William Stewart Monday listened to conflicting testimony during a hearing on requests for temporary and permanent injunctions preventing the Des Moines School District from implementing its desegregation plan next fall.

The injunction was sought by two citizen groups, Keep Education Neighborhood Orientated and Citizens for the Advancement of Rational Education. Stuart has not indicated when he will make his ruling on the injunction request.

The conflicting testimony centered on whether busing was actually harmful to the education and safety of the children or whether busing is merely a means of transportation and is neither good nor bad.

The anti-busing groups contend the school district acted in an arbitrary and unreasonable manner in drawing up the desegregation plan. Under this plan, approved by the U.S. Office for Civil Rights, about 1,200 children would be bused in an attempt to desegregate the schools. About 4,200 Des Moines school children are now bused for other reasons.

Dr. Ralph Scott, a professor of education at the University of Northern Iowa, testified he has studied many reports showing busing increases school violence, polarizes the races, raises the failure rate of minority students and wastes money better spent on improving education in the schools.

Under further questioning, Scott said he ran for governor in 1974 under the American Independent Party ticket and the party opposes busing. He said he was vaguely familiar with other studies showing busing has improved education for minorities and said he thought they were filled errors.

Michael Wise, an attorney for the U.S. Government, which is a defendant with the Des Moines School District, said he could provide witnesses to testify to the benefits of busing on education.

Robert Benton, state superintendent of public instruction, testifying for the defense said 45 per cent of the students in Iowa now ride buses to school and the Des Moines plan to bus students for purposes of desegregation poses no more danger than is faced by these other students.

Supt. Dwight Davis testified the safest way for students to travel to school is by bus. He said there was an average of fewer than one injury per year to students traveling to school by bus.

Water Restrictions Eased, Urge Voluntary Conservation

In order to protect an adequate water supply for the basic needs of the 250,000 individuals served by the Des Moines Water Works and due to the unusual drought conditions, high temperatures and lack of proper flows in the Raccoon River, it was necessary on July 15th to impose certain restrictions of water use.

With the unexpected rainfall in Des Moines over the weekend and in the upper Raccoon River Valley the past few days, in addition to approvals received yesterday from state agencies for increased water usage from the Des Moines River, these restrictions are eased.

However, an appeal is being made to everyone to practice water conservation and not use water for nonessential purposes, such as washing down driveways, cars and other ground watering purposes.

It should be understood that due to the continuing drought conditions and extreme temperatures, not public service jobs and federal incentives to private industry to create jobs in high-unemployment areas.

2. An expansion of the food-stamp program, with an emphasis on eliminating the requirement that eligible persons put up a certain amount of cash to receive the stamps.

3. Extending and improving programs such as unemployment compensation and social security that cushion the effects of unemployment and losses due to health problems.

4. A refundable tax credit using the tax system to provide modified income assistance to people now on welfare.

But Carter defended his administration's record before the same group that heard Jordon's criticism. On Monday, Carter told the Urban League conference his job programs and anti-discrimination efforts demonstrated his concern for the poor.

In his address to the convention, Carter said despite criticism to the contrary, his administration "is living up to its commitments to the poor and to the hungry and to the timid and to the weak and the unemployed."

"I have only been in office now six months and have no apologies to make," said Carter.

He said the welfare program he will soon send to Congress will emphasize jobs and work for those who are able and will provide more than a million public service jobs. Furthermore, the President said one of his first reorganization efforts has been to work out ways to handle discrimination complaints faster and more effectively.

"The point I am making to you is it takes time to change the trends of history and to reverse the bureaucratic mechanism to one of support and compassion and concern and enthusiasm from what was formerly reluctance or lack of enthusiasm," said Carter.

Jordon was quick to point out his criticism of the administration was not to be viewed as a break between the nation's Black leadership and the Carter administration.

Following the President's address Monday, Jordon said, "we weren't asking him to apologize. We found the President encouraging, positive and helpful."

Pres. Names Lewis to ACTION Post

John Robert Lewis, one of the first Freedom Riders of the 1960's and a prominent civil rights activist who headed the Voter Education Project in Atlanta, Ga. for nearly seven years, has been nominated by President Carter as associate director for domestic operations of ACTION, the federal agency for volunteer service.

"I see this appointment as a continuation of my life work to build a beloved community, a community at peace with itself," said Lewis, whose nomination is subject to Senate confirmation.

As associate director, Lewis, 37, a native of Troy, Ala., would direct the activities of more than 238,000 men and women who are serving as ACTION volunteers in a wide variety of anti-poverty and community service projects in towns and cities across the United States.

ACTION's domestic volunteer programs include: VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America), Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP), Foster Grandparent Program, Senior Companion Program and University Year for ACTION. Sam Brown is the director of ACTION, which also administers the Peace Corps.

Lewis was executive director of the Voter Education Project (VEP) from March, 1970 until January, 1977. The non-partisan organization has mobilized hundreds of thousands of volunteers to work in small towns and rural areas throughout the south, registering voters, providing citizenship education and getting out the vote in elections. According to Lewis, VEP has assisted in the registration of an estimated four million voters.

Lewis left VEP in order to run in the special election for Georgia's fifth Congressional district, the seat vacated by U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Andrew Young. He was defeated in the April 5 run-off after coming in second in the 12-person race on March 15.

Lewis attended public schools in Pike County, Ala. He graduated in 1961 with a bachelor's degree in religion from the American Baptist Theological Seminary in Nashville, Tenn. and in 1967 completed his bachelor's degree in philosophy at Fisk University there.

His involvement with the civil rights movement began in 1960 in Nashville when he organized student sit-ins at lunch counters and restaurants. In 1961, he became one of the original Freedom Riders, helping to desegregate public transportation in South Carolina and later in Alabama.

Lewis became national chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) in Atlanta in 1963, a position he held for three years.

He was one of the leaders of the March on Washington in 1963, and in 1965 he helped to organize the march from Selma to Montgomery, Ala. During the march, he was hospitalized with severe head injuries, but a few weeks later completed the 50-mile walk that brought national attention to the need for the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

During the 1960s, Lewis was arrested 40 times in connection with civil rights activities.

In 1966, Lewis joined the staff of the Field Foundation in New York City as associate director. The foundation awards grants to private organizations and educational institutions, primarily in the areas of child welfare and race relations.

From 1967 to 1970, Lewis served as director of the Southern Regional Council's Community Organization Project, based in Atlanta. The council provides assistance to community groups in the south, helping them to get organized and to set up co-ops and credit unions.

Nonviolent Peace Prize in 1975.

He serves on the boards of the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial, the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change in Atlanta and the African-American Institute in New York City.

Lewis is the son of Mrs.

Voter Education Project Names Jones Organization Director

Atlanta, Georgia — The first woman director, Vivian Malone Jones, has been named to head the nonpartisan Voter Education Project (VEP), the Atlanta-based organization which has helped to register almost two million black voters in the South since 1962.

Jones, whose appointment as executive director is effective August 1, succeeds John Lewis, who left VEP in January to run for the congressional seat vacated by U. N. Ambassador Andrew Young.

Ms. Jones will continue to build on the successes of the Voter Education Project and will seek to expand its effectiveness in the years ahead," stated VEP President Harry Huge, who announced the appointment. "Vivian Jones brings to the VEP a combination of creative commitment and administrative skills which will serve the organization well."

President John F. Kennedy federalized the Alabama National Guard in January, 1963 to make Governor George Wallace

step aside and allow Vivian Malone and James Hood to enroll in the previously all-white University of Alabama.

"Ms. Jones was a civil rights pioneer," stated Huge. "We need the spirit of independence and tenacity as the VEP continues its struggle to enroll more than 2.5 million unregistered blacks in the South and as we try to turn the rising tide of voter apathy in the nation as a whole."

Jones, a native of Mobile, Alabama, attended elementary and high school in that city. She entered Alabama A&M University in 1961, pursuing a major in Business Education. In June, 1963, she transferred to the University of Alabama where Governor George C. Wallace attempted unsuccessfully to block her admission.

Upon graduation from the University of Alabama as the first black graduate in the school's history, Jones moved to Washington, D. C., where she worked as a research analyst with the Civil Rights Division of the U. S. Department of Justice. Jones has also served with the President's Council on Youth Opportunity and the Veterans Administration Hospital in Atlanta. In 1971, she became director of the Civil Rights and Urban Affairs Division for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), Region IV, in Atlanta.

Jones was selected as a Master Fellow to work in the EPA Executive Development Program in the Office of Planning and Management in Washington, D. C. — the position she was holding at the time of her selection as VEP's new director.

"I am challenged by the opportunity to provide leadership at this critical period in the development of minority political participation," stated Jones.

Vivian Malone Jones

"The fact that blacks played a key role in the election of President Carter in 1976 must not be allowed to obscure the reality that we still have far to go before meaningful minority political participation is achieved."

"We will seek to broaden the base of VEP support as we construct programs to meet very real needs," Jones explained. "The VEP directors who preceded me — Wiley Branton, Vernon Jordan, and John Lewis — left a legacy of effectiveness which we will certainly continue, but I have to make it clear that many problems still exist. Minorities are still excluded from exercising the power of the vote throughout most of the region. It is my feeling that the political process is in great danger unless we can make more dramatic breakthroughs in the next few years."

Federal grant funds art project

A federal grant has been awarded for the first time to the Iowa Department of Public Instruction (DPI) to administer an arts education project.

"Iowa Alliance for Arts Education, Project 78" was awarded a $10,000 grant to broaden the base of arts experience for all students in the state, according to Dr. Laura Magee, DPI arts education consultant and project director. Magee said the arts are important at all educational levels. "The arts can help students make essential connections between subject matter areas. For instance, ratio and proportion are concepts which are taught in math, music and visual arts," she said. "All of the arts ought to be as basic to education as the three R's."

A major aim of the Iowa Alliance for Arts Education, Project 78 will be to develop an Iowa Community Arts Resource Guide. The guide will be an instrument to assess, coordinate and use currently existing arts resources in Iowa to strengthen and develop arts programs in elementary and secondary schools, according to Magee. The guide will be designed for use by all educators throughout the state and a copy will be available in each school building.

The project is the initial program of the Iowa Alliance for Arts Education Advisory Committee which is composed of representatives from professional arts organizations, educational organizations and citizens interested in the arts from across the state.

The grant was received from the National Alliance for Arts Education, a joint project of the John F. Kennedy Center and the Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The grant is for the first year funding.

News About Town

The Cedar Rapids Police Aide program designed to increase the number of women and minorities on the police force, was abandoned on the recommendation by Police Chief Gareth Clift.

Chief Clift said out of the 20 that expressed interest at first, only one white female qualified.

It was decided at the meeting to have Jonnie Cassel, the city's E.E.O. officer be responsible for recruiting persons interested in law enforcements duties for the civil service exam to be given possibly in January. It is the hope of all those concerned to attract persons not only in the Cedar Rapids area, and Iowa, but outside Iowa.

The decision to drop the Police Aide program was not readily accepted by Bob Brown, director of CETA, the agency by which the program was to be funded, and Linn County Sheriff Orle Workman.

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — The nation's first scarecrow contest was a festive time for these youngsters, both members of area 4-H Clubs. The contest was sponsored by 4-H and RJR Archer, a maker of aluminum products and packaging, which supplied aluminum foil to participating youngsters to create scarecrows.

4-H Clubs Bring Country to City

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — 4-H Clubs are bringing the country to the city and helping black youths escape the summertime boredom of the streets.

Half of Forsyth County's 4-H membership are black youngsters, mostly from the city. They are getting into things they never dreamed of — like the nation's first scarecrow contest, held recently.

Sponsored by the 4-H and RJR Archer, Inc., an aluminum products and packing manufacturer, the contest had more than 700 youths trying out their country craftsmanship.

Carroll G. Thompson, RJR Archer's president and chief executive officer, explained that the contest was held as a salute to scarecrows, the unofficial symbol of American agriculture, and to recognize those 4-H Clubs which showed the most creativity and imagination in designing their scarecrows.

Using aluminum foil provided by Archer, the youngsters responded with a wild assortment of entries. Scarecrows included gunslinging cowboys, a witch, a robot, farmers with hoes and pitchforks, women with parasols, and politicians in stovepipe hats.

"Our kids were crazy about the contest," said William Fair, whose club turned out one of the more creative entries — a dancer doing "the slide."

"They would call up at all hours of the day to talk about our scarecrows," says Fair, a night-shift telephone installer whose sleep often was interrupted by the ringing of his own phone. "I've never seen them more involved — we worked right up until one in the morning on the day of the contest, and those kids would have gone on some more if I hadn't said that was enough."

Fair said his club had already decided what to do with the $300 first prize, if they won. "They wanted to go around to old folks' homes and see what could be done for them, like writing letters or mowing the lawns, he said. "They would do it for free. The kids wanted to help, because they realize how lonely many old people are."

Fair's club members, ranging in age from 11-18, formed a regular assembly line to produce their scarecrow entries and spent a solid month in the effort, but they did not win.

"The competition was very stiff — I thought some of the human likenesses were remarkable," said one of the three black judges, Dr. H. D.

Covington, chancellor of Winston-Salem State University. "The good thing about a contest like this is that the skills developed in constructing an entry can be transferred to other uses — especially knowing how to use a jigsaw and other power tools, or just generally learning to work with your hands."

"All 4-H activities do have that in common — they are productive projects, and the youngsters get a feeling of accomplishment from them," agrees Sally Fair, co-advisor of her husband's 4-H club. "Our most popular activity this year has been leatherworking."

Talking with a fellow the other day. He was lamenting the absence of black golfers and said he didn't see too many promising young tennis players. He argued that the park as Good is called was full of white players, but not too many blacks. I know that when I go there at nights, I see quite a few blacks playing. And there is a young girl whose name I don't know who seems to have been taught pretty well. Except for too short a stride on her shots, she hits the ball well.

As I look at them, I can see that most of the fellows are young men out of school who were former athletes and want to continue to stay in shape.

When we played, our best players were professional people in their early forties or late thirties who had the money to buy the best equipment and the time to play. Now I wonder if that isn't the case with these players at Good Park. They are in their middle twenties, or early thirties and have jobs that will let them afford the necessary equipment. But they will never be a threat to the nationally rated players, but they do have fun.

In our Hilltop closed meet, these guys made up in hustle and desire what they lacked in ability. Some of the players are teachers in the various schools such as Jock Johnson who has vowed to play in every meet he can get in, and so far has done just that. He hasn't been getting very far, but he says he is playing well. And there are others like him.

But I wonder how many of the smaller people are taking to the game. The National Junior Tennis League was originally set up for underprivileged kids, but it was opened to take in all kids, and this is good. But the kids it was designed to help are turning back to basketball, football and such, while those who can afford it are playing in the NJTL. All you have to do is go to Waveland or other school courts around the city, and you will see what I mean. I have no quarrel with this, but there ought to be some way to motivate the other people.

And what do you do about golf? This is a game that costs to play, and you have to have transportation to the links. Sometimes you can walk to the tennis courts. I tried to interest a group of kids in walking to the East High courts that were about eight blocks away, but it was no soap. Yet they played ball in the street all day. How do you figure it?

It is almost time for our Hilltop again, even with the revised schedule. We are expecting a smaller draw this year, but it will probably go on anyway. Some of my acquaintances say that we are having people suggest that they not play in our meet. This should be a good test to see how we can come up with a meet in spite of our problems. And the deadline is July 30 at

Prevent heat exhaustion

Fatigue, cramps and exhaustion due to excessive heat can be prevented if persons working in hot environments (outside or inside) use care in the replacement of salt and water from the body during the present heat wave, according to Dr. Julius S. Conner, director, Des Moines-Polk County Health Department.

Sweating, in a hot environment (outside or inside) over the average work day may cause the occurrence of a considerable loss of water (5 quarts or more) and salt (4-8 teaspoons) from the body. An individual may lose up to 10 pounds during a single day if this loss is not replaced.

"Incomplete replacement of salt and water account in midnight. Why midnight? Why not?

This is a bit out of the ordinary, but worth mentioning. The Corinthian Church summer bowling league closed out its season last week. It was a mixed league, and I have never seen people have so much fun and yet play so hard. They were the best bunch of sports I have seen in a long time. And the winners in the leagues were Bobby Wilson, high game. Jim Wade High series.

For the women it was Mrs. Hutchinson with high game and I forgot who for series. The team winner was the bunch of Caralota and La Vone Burton, Dorothy Jones and the name of the fourth person also escapes me.

But it was fun, and maybe someone will supply the two names I have forgotten.

a great part for the signs of heat excess. Early there is tiredness; later, muscle cramps appear in the hands, arms, legs or stomach. In extreme cases complete collapse with heat stroke or heat exhaustion is observed," Dr. Conner said.

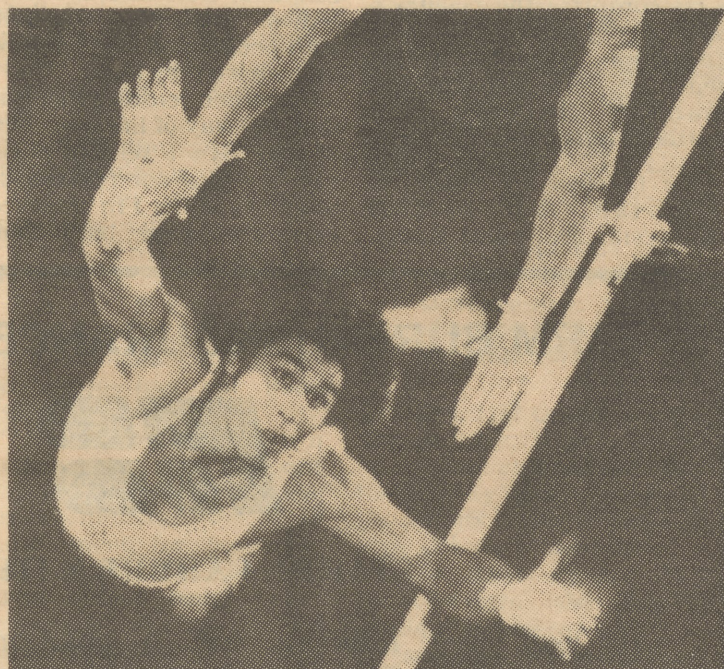

Dr. Conner offered the following hints to help cope with the heat wave:

1. Eat an adequate, well balanced diet.

2. Take in fluid (water and other non-alcoholic beverages) at hourly intervals when perspiring. This will require slightly more fluid than merely to quench the first.

3. Use a generous amount of table salt for seasoning at each meal. (Persons on special diets, or who have heart disease, high blood pressure or other chronic

AMA Health Tips About Football

All over the nation American males are tossing and kicking and running with footballs, all the way from 8-year-olds in the backyard to junior and senior high and college teams to the big bruisers of the professional leagues.

Football is a rough contact sport and inevitably will produce its full quota of bumps and bruises, strains and sprains, cuts and gashes. Most of these aren't serious and the lads concerned are back in the game shortly.

A thorough medical examination is highly important for boys preparing to go out for football to make certain that there is no physical condition that should be noted before beginning the rigorous training and hard knocks of the game.

Proper physical illnesses should consult their private doctors with regard to extra salt). Salt tablets on the job in addition to salted food is unnecessary in most instances.

4. When heat becomes intolerable rest a short time in a cool environment.

5. The wearing of loose and light-colored clothing can be helpful.

6. And avoid over exertion. Because of sweating, additional daily requirements should include:

Table salt, 2 teaspoons (over the day in food, for outdoor work, 1 teaspoon, (over the day in food) for indoor work.

Water, 16 glasses (over the day) for outdoor work, 8 glasses (over the day), for indoor work.

conditioning hardens the body and increases resistance to fatigue, thus helping prevent injury. A minimum of three weeks of conditioning are recommended prior to the first game of the season. Coaches and team physicians are alert to the fact that many injuries occur when the player is tiring and thus less alert.

Good coaching enables the players to perform better and thus be less prone to injury. Good officiating makes for better games and also helps protect players. Proper equipment and facilities are important to reduce injuries. Good first aid procedures and medical care, with a physician available during practice drills and on the bench during games are major factors in cutting serious injuries.

Precautions against the extreme heat of early season days also are important. Many coaches now schedule the hot weather workouts in early morning and late afternoon to avoid the heat of the day. The old rule against drinking water during drills and games has long since been proved invalid and dangerous. Water and salt is necessary to replace fluids lost through copious sweating.

If your boy is playing on an organized team, the chances are good that all of these safeguards are observed. If most of his playing is done on a vacant lot in the afternoons and on Saturdays, it becomes the parents' responsibility to see that the player has the benefit of the safety principles.

Buffalo Man Serves With Peace Corps As Math Teacher

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia—Try as he might, sometimes Peace Corps volunteer Charles Long of 84 Donaldson Road, Buffalo, N.Y., can't get a response out of his math students in the Malaysian town of Kulong.

It's not that they don't know the answers, says Long, 24, a 1976 mathematics graduate of Lincoln University in Lincoln University, Pa. More often, it's because they're too shy to speak up in class, or baffled by the unfamiliar notion that there can be give and take between teacher and students in class.

"Here the students are used to having the teacher come in and present the lesson while they take notes, with no questions asked," says Long, the son of Benjamin and Virginia Long of Buffalo. "I try to get the students involved. I call them up to the board, so I know whether they can do the work or not."

"I think they think I'm crazy sometimes," he laughs. "I'm still working on getting a total response. But it's very much improved since I first got there."

Long feels his method is a more effective means of teaching math, but he has more than that in mind when he tries to spark a response in class. "If you never speak out for yourself you never make yourself known," he points out. "So I think it carries outside the classroom into everyday life. You express yourself and let other people know how you feel."

Long teaches modern math to fourth form students—roughly equivalent to high school juniors—at a large government school in Kulong, a town of about 50,000 on the west coast of peninsular Malaysia. Malaysia, a multi-racial nation of about 11.5 million people, is divided into two parts by the South China Sea—the 11 West Malaysian states on the Malay Peninsula extending southward from Thailand, and the two states of East Malaysia on the island of Borneo.

With 2,500 students enrolled, Long's school must operate on morning and afternoon shifts. The volunteer teaches five math classes each morning, when the older students attend, and also is active in extra-curricular activities. "I'm the coach of the basketball team and head of the astronomy and photography clubs at school," he says. He also gives piano lessons, studies Mandarin Chinese, and recently was elected by his fellow Peace Corps volunteers in his region as their representative to the Volunteer Advisory Council. "I try to keep myself active," Long says. "Since I'm here as a volunteer, I feel that I'm going to learn more than I'm going to teach someone. People just don't give you anything—not only over here but anywhere in the world. If I'm going to make a success out of myself, I see no better opportunity than to start here. I want to be successful in whatever I do."

Long came to Malaysia in October, 1976, and began teaching in January following Peace Corps training for his assignment. His training included an introduction to Malaysian life and the customs of the Malays, Chinese and Indians who comprise the country's main ethnic groups; technical preparation for teaching; and the study of Bahasa Malaysia, the national language.

He teaches his classes in English, but Bahasa Malaysia, also called Malay, is rapidly becoming the medium of instruction in the nation's schools. At Long's school, for example, each year another form, or grade, is switched from English to Bahasa Malaysia instruction. "Now forms one through three are Malay medium, and next year form four will be," he says. The change can be difficult for Chinese and Indian students who previously were taught in their own languages or in English. The majority of Long's students are Chinese.

Long is one of four Peace Corps volunteers in his town, but the only volunteer and the only foreigner teaching at his school. "I'm the only foreigner alright," he says. "It's not every day they see a black person. Sometimes people think I'm Malay, and I've been called Puerto Rican, Cuban and Arab, among other things."

"At school, we've gotten to know one another, but even in town now I get these crazy looks. When they ask me questions about black folks at home they seem to always pertain to Muhammad Ali and George Foreman. So I tell them that black folks do more than just play sports and entertain."

"I always try to tell them, Look, I came to Malaysia and I see what it's like. Your view of America is just not so. If you go to America you will see for yourself."

Long says he likes Malaysia for several reasons, including its climate and beaches, "but I think more than anything else that keeps me over here it's these different people I'm running into every day. Besides Malaysians, you meet people from the States, England, Germany, the West Indies, Australia. You talk with people and find out how it is where they live."

"Another reason I like it is that the way of life over here is easy. It's a relaxed pace. For me it's not relaxed so much because I'm involved in a lot of things, but it's not the hurry you have at home."

Serving overseas has broadened his outlook, the volunteer believes. "I've always held the view that we're basically the same," he says, "and I still do. I guess my view has broadened—that people need to talk to one another more so they can understand one another. If that were to happen more there wouldn't be so many problems in the world today."

"I guess maybe that's what I see myself doing," he reflects. "I won't change the world—no one of us can. We all have to come together. I feel like I can contribute toward that cause. In which way or form, I'm just not sure."

Long is one of about 200 Peace Corps volunteers serving in Malaysia in a wide variety of education, agriculture and other development programs. Around the world, more than 6,200 Americans are taking part in Peace Corps programs in 62 nations.

The Peace Corps is part of ACTION, the federal agency for volunteer service established in July, 1971, to administer volunteer programs at home and overseas. Sam Brown is the director of ACTION.

The Peace Corps is now recruiting about 2,700 new volunteers to begin training this summer for two year assignments overseas. Persons with backgrounds in math/science education, agriculture and health are particularly needed.

ACTION's domestic programs include Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA), Foster Grandparent Program, Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP), Senior Companion Program and University Year for ACTION.

Computer Salvage Job For Inner-City Youth

PHOENIX — With the help of the local Urban League, people as well as computer components are being recycled in a bustling small factory on Apache Street here.

Obsolete computer systems are disassembled at Honeywell's reclamation operation and reduced to thousands of electronic components, miles of wire and pounds of metal by inner-city high school students enrolled in a work-experience program. It's a game that everybody wins — valuable material is salvaged for further use, and the young men and women get high school credits and are paid while they learn valuable job skills.

As many as 12 students at a time spend three months picking up basic shop and tool skills; learning assembly-disassembly of mechanical, electrical and electronic units; studying warehousing, and practicing retail shopkeeping. A typical work-week lasts 20 hours.

Dick Hotaling, manager of Honeywell's Apache Street

Facility, was instrumental in creating this program that helps youth and salvages useful computer parts. He said recently, "Since the facility opened in 1968 it has been dedicated to meeting a specific inner-city need — job training. At first we worked with adults considered the 'hard-core unemployed.' Of 58 who entered the program during a six-year period, half were eventually placed within Honeywell's manufacturing facilities in Phoenix and at other employers in the area.

"In 1974 we decided to work with youngsters," Hotaling continued. "The original concepts, however, have remained the same: learning how to handle tools, maintain inventories and serve customers." Candidates for the program are identified with the help of local schools and minority organizations such as Phoenix Urban League, Phoenix Opportunities Industrialization Center and SER (Service-Education-Development).

"From the moment a piece of old equipment enters the Apache Street facility until it is reborn as a marketable component, it is totally entrusted to the students," Hotaling said. "We train them how to use tools, tell them why certain parts are important and how to prepare materials for re-sale.

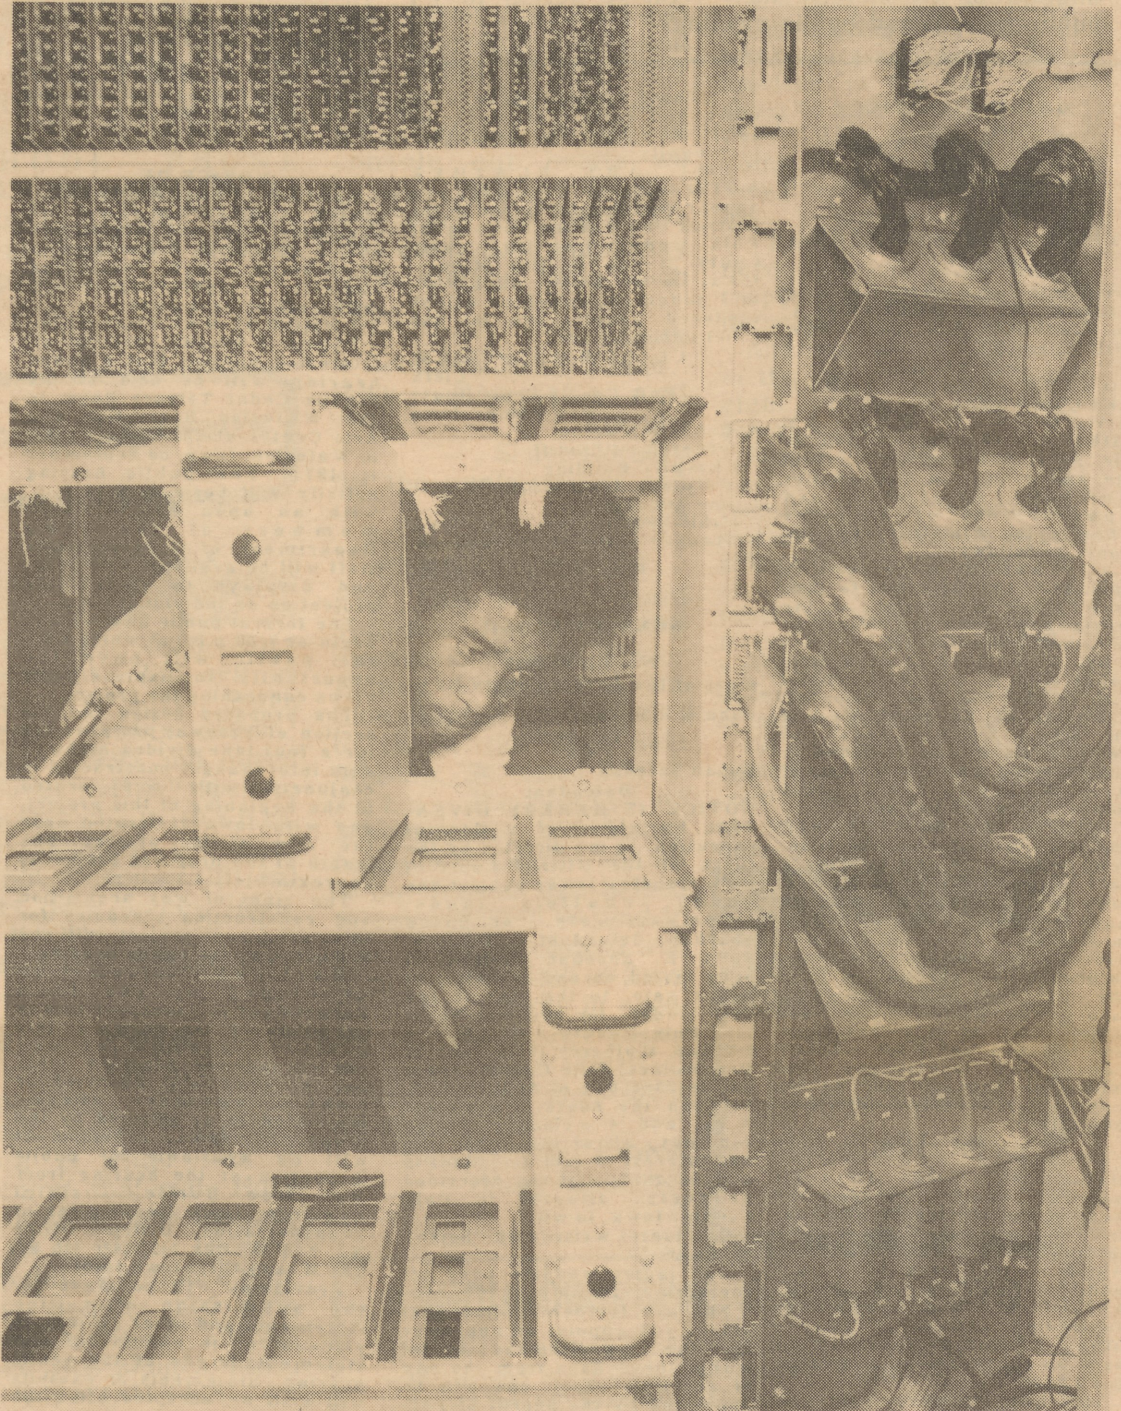

"The rest is up to the kids."

In addition to the joy of working with youth, Hotaling also enjoys the look of discovery on the face of the electronics hobbyist and the businessman looking for the hard-to-find component.

"Many customers, like myself, are 'junkaholics' who browse for hours among our bins and shelves, letting imagination create new uses for still useful parts," he said.

To date 50 young students have gone through the program, which Honeywell considers an outstanding success. The company has recycled valuable raw materials — and even more valuable young lives.

SPECIAL COURSE at a Honeywell facility in Phoenix teaches inner-city high school students like Steve Argusta the fundamentals of tool-use and storekeeping. In the cooperative education program youths learn to take obsolete computers apart for school credit, pay and the chance to learn valuable skills.

Warns of bogus insulation contractors

The Federal Energy Administration Wednesday issued a warning to consumers to be extremely cautious of any insulation contractors who pose as federal inspectors or who infer the proposed insulation tax credit legislation has been passed into law.

James R. Newman, Region VII Administrator, sounded the warning after Federal Energy Administration special investigators uncovered apparent fraudulent insulation practices operating within the Metropolitan Kansas City area. The results of the investigations were to be forwarded to the National Office of FEA, the U.S. Attorney, the State (Missouri) Attorney General's Office, the U.S. Federal Trade Commission, and the U.S. Internal Revenue Service for evaluation and possible prosecution.

Newman described the scheme as follows: "Homeowners are contacted over the telephone and told that the caller is a representative of the President's Energy Conservation Council — posing as government officials or inferring association with the U.S. Government.

"The homeowner is then told that he or she will receive $100 or $400 tax credit following completion of an inspection by a representative of the company. And, an appointment is made as soon as possible.

"The 'salesmen' arrives at the residence and may or may not conduct an attic inspection. Then, without specifying exactly the quantity of insulation the firm would install in the attic, the representative arrives at a cost estimate, usually in excess of $1,000. Following completion of the installation, he assures the homeowner that a certificate would be presented, guaranteeing a $400 tax credit."

Newman emphasized that not one insulation contractor or installer may allege association with any agency of the United States Government.

The Regional Administrator also noted that the insulate tax credit legislation has not been passed into law.

"The Administration proposed a 20 percent income tax credit to the homeowner for the first $2,000 spent for insulation and related energy conservation measures," Newman stated. "The maximum reduction in taxes owed would be $400 to the homeowner who spends $2,000 having these services performed. This was just one program area of The National Energy Plan. The legislation was recommended to be retroactive to April 20, 1977. But Congress may modify these proposals."

The Regional Administrator urged citizens who may have become victims of this or similar insulation schemes to call the FEA Regional Headquarters Office at (816) 374-2191 or to write to the Federal Energy Administration, Compliance Division, 1150 Grand Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri 64106. Newman emphasized that the identity of the citizen and the details involved would be kept strictly confidential.

Newman suggested homeowners who plan to insulate should consider:

—seeking references from the Home Builders Association or the electric or gas utility in your area;

—contacting your local office of the Better Business Bureau;

—receiving a number of estimates for the work you wish to have performed and sign nothing until you are satisfied with the contractual arrangement and the guarantees provided.

IRS sets test dates

The Internal Revenue Service has selected October 6 and 7, 1977, as the test dates for the 1977 Special Enrollment Examination.

The Examination, given annually to qualify persons who are neither CPAs nor attorneys to represent clients before the IRS, will be held in Room 113 at the Federal Building at 210 Walnut Street in Des Moines.

To qualify for the Examination, applicants must submit Form 2587, Application for the 1977 Special Enrollment Examination, to the Director, Audit Division, Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C., 20224, no later than August 15, 1977. No extensions to file will be granted beyond that date, the IRS said.

The application must be accompanied by a recent photo of the applicant, which will be used for identification purposes only, and a check or money order for the examination fee, made payable to the Internal Revenue Service. The fee is not refundable, but a credit may be granted to apply on the next year's application fee as provided on the instructions on the back of Form 2587.

Anyone needing an application Form 2587; a copy of Publication 486, Requirements for Internal Revenue Service Enrollment and Special Enrollment Examination; and a copy of Publication 693, Sample Booklet Special Enrollment Examination, which includes more detailed information about the examination should contact the District IRS office at 210 Walnut Street, Des Moines, Iowa 50309.

Home energy audit can be done by homeowner

A new energy conservation concept, designed particularly for the homeowner, is being introduced by Iowa Power.
Entitled the "Do-It-Yourself Energy Inventory," the conservation program will enable the homeowner to examine his home and determine the areas in need of energy-saving improvements.

Eugene E. Young, Vice President-Customer
Information and Marketing, said the home energy audit is a logical followup to the
Dr. Wise Use Energy Diet.
"We believe the Energy Inventory will have an even greater impact on conservation than the Energy Diet," Young noted.
The Energy Diet booklet, which lists the individual energy costs to operate most household appliances, has been distributed to 105,000 customers since it was introduced less than one year ago.

The Energy Inventory covers both the interior and exterior of the home. It consists of simple, step-by-step instructions for checking such things as insulation, caulking, weatherstripping, and heating and air conditioning systems. Point values assigned to each section of the audit enable the homeowner to determine not only how energy efficient his home is, but also those areas where energy "leaks" are most costly.

Car Trips With Children

Traveling with children in a car on your vacation is likely to be a more pleasant experience if you do some careful planning, advised Regina B. Fineran, extension home economist.

She said, first of all, forget about making record time to wherever you're going. With children in the car you're going to have to stop at least every two hours. They're going to get restless and they'll need to stretch their legs.

"Parents will probably need a break from being cooped up with the children in the car, too," she added.

And, you won't want to be in the car much more than eight hours in one day, Fineran advised.

Before you leave on the vacation, make sure you plan plenty of activities to do in the car. There are many games that can be played in the car. Your family may have fun making up some. Popular games include keeping track of the different state license plates or car makes and colors.

"If you have children old enough to read, you might want to make up score cards ahead of the trip and then have a car scavenger hunt.
