Des Moines Man Seeks Change In U.S., South Africa

by

Stephanie L. Michael

The flaming dispute in South Africa has been brewing since the arrival of white settlers in 1652, where the city of Cape Town is now located. Settlers came to the continent to establish a sailing base and discovered the land inhabited by basically Negroid Bantu speaking tribesmen that were hunters and herders.

Since that time period the history of South Africa has been fictitious and distorted. History books indicate that white settlers arrived in the country the same time the Bantu tribesmen settled. This distortion has perpetuated the Afrikaans language and the domination by a single white cultural group in a land of a Negroid race of people.

The problems of South Africa are identical to those displayed in history and many present conditions of blacks in America. But for the most part U.S. blacks did not begin to identify themselves with the struggle of South African blacks until the tragic death of Bantu Stephen Biko.

Biko an African civil rights and liberation leader was taken by South African political police on Tuesday, September 6, 1977. Reports state that he was taken to room 619 of the Sanlam building on Strand Street, Port Elizabeth, Cape Province, where he was handcuffed, put into leg irons, chained to a grille and subjected to twenty-two hours of interrogation. During that interrogation, official reports indicated that Biko was tortured and beaten sustaining several blows to the head which damaged his brain fatally, causing him to lapse into a coma and die six days later.

A Des Moines born resident, Robert David Baker has been involved in helping the fight against racism in America and in South Africa. Baker has recently been appointed by the Pan American/Pan African Association International Student Support Committee. He will be working in Syracuse, New York organizing a hemispheric anti-apartheid conference to be held in Kingston, Jamaica on October 12-17th. After the conference, Baker will be taking a 1 year internship in Washington, D.C. He will be working for the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law.

"I will be formulating papers, panel discussions and other actions for the hemispheric conference. Basically the idea of my whole job is to help find and form domestic legal strategies to combat the apartheid in South Africa. My internship in Washington, also hinges upon those same lines. The lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law has been one of the most active and recognized private organizations involved with domestic relations including dealings in South Africa.

"I'll be examining and finding ways to fight U.S. government investments in the country. Things such as corporate involvement ties with the apartheid rather than individual connections of support. I plan to design strategies where they are most vulnerable."

Baker grew up in Des Moines attending Tech High school and Grandview Community College. To further his education after getting out of the Armed Forces, he went on to Iowa State University to get his B.S. and M.S. in mathematics education. He later moved to Santa Clara, California where he went on to law school at the University of Santa Clara.

While in Des Moines, he says he was involved with many community projects. Baker says he was one of several people that helped bring in and design the community development R-40 project. Using Des Moines as a training ground, he went on to more involved political activities. He is now a member of the South African Consciousness committee and is secretary of the International Campaign Against Racism in Sports.

"Some people may think that having studied mathematics and now being involved in politics is sort of contradictory, but its not. Science, which mathematics is a part of, is highly political. For instance, the nuclear power issue is not exactly related to math, but the overall picture of economics, political and social issues revolve around the existence of this power source. Mathematics lets you know exactly what is coming down in the long run through computations and a look at the whole economic

by Allen Ashby

A fellow was telling me that the blacks in Des Moines ought to get together as he put it, and they could get more things for people. I thought that we aren't doing too badly in some quarters now, and that it would be hard to pull all of the people in the various sections of town on any one project. Who would lead them? Contrary to what people believe, there isn't anyone who could swing the black community one inch in any direction. They go their separate ways and maybe they always have.

I know that there was a time when we were supposed to have leaders; in fact, we had so many of them that there were just about as many leaders as there were people. I often wondered why the politicians didn't get wise and count up the number of votes each so called leader claimed to control. If he had he would have probably discovered that there were more votes claimed than the entire black population in the city.

We often thought that this was one of the reasons why we never got too far in getting jobs for us. There were so many people representing us that about all the newly elected official had to say was for us to get together and come back. And since some of our leaders had demanded money, they couldn't bring any pressure on anyone to get anything else.

It was a merry old chase in the days when leaders represented us and demanded something for "my people."

Are things better now? Well, you can pass the civil service tests and have a chance of getting on the list, something that couldn't be done unless somebody wanted a certain person on the list.

I recall a fellow who was selected for a job here in the city. The job was to be given to the person passing the civil service test.

A couple of fellows just out of college (black) took the test. A high school dropout took the thing and he asked the college boys about their answers. From what he told them, he couldn't have passed the test. But when the grades came out, the college boys flunked out, and the high school dropout passed the test and got the job, which we later learned was set up for him in front.

I don't think that could be done now, or could it. Maybe things are better.

Did you ever sit down to write a column and have nothing come out? Well, this is it.

Thoughts and Comments

By James B. Morris III

A. PHILIP RANDOLPH (CONTINUED)

Randolph again moved into the national limelight in 1947 when he launched his second mass-action effort against one of the most segregated major institutions in American society - the armed forces. He called for an executive order from President Truman similar to the one signed by Roosevelt, and promised that, should Truman fail to respond, he would call on all young Black men to refuse conscription into the armed forces (during the peacetime draft).

Again it was a bold gesture in the face of white authority, intended to force the federal government to act positively to improve the status of Black Americans, and was quite audacious in view of the fact that white Americans seemed sure that, if relief was not forthcoming, Randolph would follow through on this threat. While he was willing to take great risks and, if necessary, perform acts of civil disobedience, he was unwilling to cross the narrow line from non-violent protest into violent action. Non-violence to him was absolute, and would allow no capitulation or compromise into the sort of despair which breeds violence.

Although some in the ranks of the established Black leadership expressed reservations about a campaign of civil disobedience toward the draft, he did not waiver, and the sentiments of Black youth, including the returning veterans of WWII, were increasingly favorable. President Truman capitulated, and signed Executive Order 9981 on July 26, 1948, which called for an end to military discrimination "as rapidly as possible."

This decree was, as before, a testimony to Randolph's sense of tactics timing and strategy, but also was a reflection of the changing temper of the population and the political institutions in this country. At the same-time Randolph was raising the 'specter' of draft resistance, the Democratic party was in the process of adopting the strongest race-relations platform ever in the history of a major American political party.

This platform, which, unlike earlier political programs, addressed itself to the specific social and economic injustices suffered by racial minorities in this country, was the first major acknowledgement of the significance of the Black vote and showed that organized non-violence, as practiced by Randolph, was to be the dominant protest concept of the future.

We must not now forget that A. Philip Randolph was also one of the, if not the, greatest and most influential Black labor leader of his time. Discrimination on the basis of race in the organized labor movement has always been a problem to Black workers, and the point has been made that trade unions have a special obligation to Black Americans to alleviate their economic and educational disadvantage. A Brink-Harris study done in 1964 for "Newsweek" magazine surveyed, among other things, Black attitudes toward labor unions. It revealed somewhat of an ambivalent attitude toward labor unions. On the one hand, Blacks recognized support given to their cause from "liberal" unions like the United Auto Workers.

On the other, however, they saw unions as another inbuilt white mans' method to withhold from them an opportunity to join the mainstream of society. At a time when Black participation in unions reflected the level of Black employment in industries covered by union contracts, that is hardly suprising. The leadership of the AFL-CIO, which represented perhaps the greatest numbers of unionized white Americans, had been under attack since the mid 1950's, when Randolph and Herbert Hill, Labor Secretary of the NAACP began to speak out against bias in most trade union's membership and apprenticeship policies.

Randolph's charges against the AFL-CIO (of which he had been a vice-president since 1957) at its 1959 annual convention, at which time he urged the organization to expel those unions guilty, so angered President George Meany that he said, "Phil, who in the hell made you the guardian of all the Negroes in America"? Randolph was censured by the organization's Executive Committee, but the censure report was never referred back to the executive council and thus never acted upon.

In 1960, largely in response to the inattention of the AFL-CIO to his demands, he organized the Negro American Labor Council. As of 1965, the NALC had some 35 local chapters and approximately 10,000 members, but, at this point in time, I am unaware of its current status.

In recent years due largely to the efforts of Randolph, the AFL-CIO has become quite active on the administrative and legislative levels in trying to locate legal means to end racial barriers and has maintained lobbies for equal voting rights, fair employment and other civil rights measures. Having been accused by Randolph and others of not practicing what they preached, the 1960 Convention of the AFL-CIO faced the problems and a vastly stronger Civil Rights Department, with strengthened powers and backed by the judicial processes of the organization, was created.

It also opened a special office of that Department in Atlanta in early 1964 to attempt to persuade Southern unions to end discriminatory practices and aid union leaders and members in complying with civil rights laws. Randolph infused into the AFL, by his efforts, the idea that the inclusion of Blacks in the labor movement would not be a threat to unions, but their strength. Because the largest percentage of Black workers basically unorganized, they constituted a source of potential union power that could be channelled at the initiative of the union leadership. Largely through his efforts, Blacks today are a significant force not only in American industry, but also in organized labor.

Getting Ahead

Robert V. Morris

I am sorry to say that due to an increasingly hectic schedule, I will not be able to continue my column "Getting Ahead" through the summer. The reason for this is that my present schedule fails to allot me sufficient time to devote to the column. I return with the column in the fall around late August or early September, so I am not gone for good. I will also continue with various writing assignments for the Bystander through the summer.

I am very happy to say that my space will be filled with a very interesting column. My older brother, William S. Morris will appear in the space with a weekly column focusing on the true state of "black politics" in this country. William is a recent honors graduate from the Political Science department of the University of Iowa. His education and insight into politics I am sure will lead to a very interesting, in depth look at the area.

I will close this week by stating that analyzing the educative process in relation to black students is a very complex and frustrating duty. It has become clear to me that black educational advancement of the past is slowly, but surely deteriorating.

We must realize that this deterioration is not along lines that we are accustomed to. It has become psychological instead of physical. Lack of understanding this point is just what is contributing to the conservative, or apathetic attitudes of both blacks and whites who in earlier times might have shown concern with the situation. The various Civil Rights groups around the country, who could be aiding this situation are to plagued with lack of participation and financial backing.

They are also plagued with internal conservatism which is visible in the total organizational complexion. Many factors contribute to this conservatism, or apathy which are for the most part psychological, social or economic. The only way to bring this negative process to a halt is education and communal inspiration. Hopefully the future will hold more of the two.

Our New Day Begun

RELINQUISHING POLITICAL POWER

In what must be viewed as an almost unprecedented move, President Carter scolded Black Americans for not exercising their right to vote to help overcome what he quite correctly characterized as "the cancer of racial injustice" that "has always been near the heart of America."

Mr. Carter was speaking in commencement exercises at the 141-year-old black Cheyney State College in Pennsylvania just three days after the NAACP celebrated the silver anniversary of the Brown v. Board of Education decision outlawing "separate but equal" facilities.

"How are we going to have the leadership to fight for equal opportunity and affirmative action in jobs, schools and housing if even the act of voting is too great an effort?" he wondered.

Given the fact that without the nearly total support from black voters in 1976 Mr. Carter would not now be President, it is understandable that he appreciates the potential political clout of America's still largest minority group. Not only that, but Mr. Carter, a southerner, has to a large extent prided himself on his lifelong association with blacks.

His close friendship with the Martin Luther King family, his open expression of affinity for blacks, his recent vacation on the nearly all-black Sapelo Island off the Georgia coastline where he and his family worshipped in an all-black church proudly savoring cultural delicacies afterward all distinctly differentiate Mr. Carter from other avowedly liberal presidents, except Lyndon Johnson, another southerner of historic note.

As a result of his open embrace of the traditional victims of racial discrimination, Mr. Carter's association has often been criticized as being more symbolic than substantive. Some critics attempt to compare his record of achievement on social programs with his expressions of support for blacks. As a result, they have found his achievement record disappointing.

One of President Carter's indisputable strengths, however, clearly is political realism. Without this genius for sizing up voter sentiments, he never would have been able to defeat an incumbent president, and his chances for reelection next year would be dimmed.

His often repeated statements that he will not challenge President Carter next year notwithstanding, Massachusetts Senator Ted Kennedy looms as a major threat. There is also California Gov. Jerry Brown whose non-orthodox form of politicking could very well undercut fatally Mr. Carter.

Given these prospects, the President almost desperately needs good political insurance. Blacks still represent that opportunity. In moving to awaken black political consciousness, therefore, what are his chances of success?

Clearly, Mr. Carter recognizes that without the 1965 Voting Rights Act, his chances of victory that, properly utilized, could be one of the most significant stepping stones to full racial equality. Ironically, however, southern blacks have utilized the power of the ballot box much more effectively than their brothers and sisters in urban centers in the North.

The political tragedy of blacks in such cities as New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Hartford, Conn., Chicago and elsewhere is that their political power is almost miniscule compared to their numbers. On the national level, the tragedy is the same. Special interest groups outmaneuver blacks on almost every major issue that concerns them.

But it makes little sense to complain against racial injustice and exploitation when blacks themselves do not utilize the power they now have. Blacks have the opportunity to register and vote. Yet they do not do so.

The NAACP, recognizing this problem, has therefore shifted its voter education program from Birmingham to Detroit. Our branches around the nation have been alerted to this crisis. It is time for Black Americans now to join in developing their political might.

Hi Des Moines:

Definitely enjoyed myself on my brief trip to Des Moines in April - thank all who made it enjoyable.

Just a few lines to say my Mother's Day was lovely. My daughter's, Ms. Tanya Marshall, Ms. Sandra Hobson, Ms. Jeanetta R. Daniels and Ms. Marshall's sister - in-law, Ms. Elizabeth Thompkins - treated me to dinner at Emerson Street East. The food was lovely. From there we drove over to the "19th Hole", a big nice club, and spent about a half hour.

It was now time for a switch. So trying to keep to my carefully laid plans - I gave my daughter, Jeanetta R. Daniels a birthday party at Mr. Hooper's Club. We had a packed house. I think almost all my Denver invitations was honored sometime during the course of the evening. The menu - was fried chicken, several kinds of lunchmeats and cheeses, bread and butter, salads - macaroni and cheese.

The tables were graced with white paper tablecloths that had beautiful silver bells on them. To bring out the bells more - yellow and rust paper napkins were used and paper plates accordingly.

The whole thing was nice - sorry that all you Iowans invited could not make it.

“I personally stayed away from the research / college professor realm, because I wanted to be more active with community affairs. If you are established in a total academic air you can't move freely with community efforts. Mathematics and law are more related than most people think. In both professions you must take the facts present and from those develop a case. While organizing the facts you must take your environment into consideration, recognize the process by which you must achieve a conclusion and come to a climax recognizing the system which you are working under. It's all a logical approach.”

The young activist says being involved with community issues can somewhat restrict mobility in America's society. But he says on the other hand this restriction lets him pursue the goals he personally wants to achieve. He says there is enough flexibility of alternatives so that he can exercise many of his talents and skills through community orientation.

Discussing events and changes of the 1960's, Baker says many of his school mates who were educated have gone both ways in society.

“I am a product of the 1960's and many of my friends have used their education to continue on with the struggle against racism in America. But there have been a number of them who have become frustrated and have gone to drugs or choose to join the system because they have the credentials.

“I would say we are suffering a white backlash from the 60's. Universities and corporations realize that the pressure is off and there is not a lot of social unrest taking place. The struggle is on a much lower level, one of pure passivity. The struggle for minorities in this country is very subtle because very few in this society today are willing to take the responsibility to demand change.

“Most of the men and women who were out to make change have been assassinated, discredited or done away with in some manner. Many blacks think the government was and still is committed to bringing about change for us, but this is not true. The government has always been tied to only giving material things.”

The future and time is what Baker says black Americans have to take into consideration. He says the only way problems will be resolved for minorities is if they take command of their own lives and destiny.

“Many of us are still holding on to the dream house theory. It's estimated that around 65 percent of Americans are permanent renters, this means these people will never have the opportunity to own a home. It appears that society is trying to make minorities, particularly blacks a permanent underclass. The sources of energy are becoming exhausted and very few people are going to be able to pass dreams of luxury onto their children, let alone achieve the goal themselves.

“Blacks are going to have to become more attuned to technological skills. I know this of course is going to be very difficult because very few of us ever finish high school, particularly black males. But if we don't do something soon we are going to be caught in an under current. We have to quickly realize our situation and act upon it.”

Baker and his wife,

Justina work together to achieve political goals in America and on an international scene. Justina is not yet legally an American citizen but she has applied for American citizenship. She is a native of Port Elizabeth, South Africa, but has lived in London, England for a number of years. She has been in the U.S. since 1971.

In making suggestions to young blacks, particularly young black males, Baker says he would encourage them to prepare themselves socially, politically and academically.

TAKE A LOOK AT YOUR FAMILY FROM A DIFFERENT POINT OF VIEW

Sheryl L. Calhoun was among the sixty-six graduates from Grandview College pilot four year nursing program commencement ceremonies Saturday May 19, 1979 at Veterans Auditorium.

She received a Bachelor of Science degree in Nursing. Sheryl attended University of Iowa and transferred to Grandview in August of 1975. She will be employed at Broadlawns Medical Center.

SURPRISE SURPRISE! Upside-down. Right-side-up. Sideways. And every way. Watch the kids blush when Sam Panda gives 'em a kiss. Watch their eyes light up when you hand them an ice cream cone. Thrill with them on knee-knocking rides like the Zambezi Zinger, the Wing Ding and Zulu. And of course, don't miss that reassuring hug you'll get at the day's end.

Clap, stomp and sing-along with the terrific singers and dancers in our Tivoli Music Hall production of "Gotta Dance." Cheer for our all-star performing dolphins, Skipper and Dolly. ALLEN ASHBY with a LOOK ON SPORTS

This is a tough time for sports. The basketball season came to a screeching halt when the Seattle Sonics did in the Washington Bullets in a surprisingly short series. Most of the experts figured it to go the limit. If your follow the cage game you know all about the news accounts of the series. But the attendance was the big thing.

Lately we have heard sports commentators feel sorry for the fact that the increasing number of blacks in the NBA is hurting the attendance. Well, I don't think you could have gotten another person into any of the five games that were played. blacks or no blacks. People want a winner and don't care what color it comes in.

Now, after a few successive wins, they will begin to question whether "we" need all these blacks. That was the main reason Bill Russell said he felt no regrets about leaving Boston where he was the main reason behind the Celtics' string of world titles. He said the fans were complaining about there being too many blacks on the team. So I would have to guess that would hold true today after the glow wears off that first couple of wins.

Maybe it could happen in baseball if there were enough blacks in the game. There have been a few rumblings about football in the NFL, and that may be one of the big reasons why you don't see too many black quarterbacks. Signal callers like Vince Edwards and Doug Williams can lead their teams to wins, but still there is the constant argument that they can't read defenses like whites.

Since when did the color of a person's skin determine how he could read problems?

Oh, well, enough of this.

Went down to the Younker's Kodol tennis meet last week-end. Our Hilltop team got swamped. In fact Harold McCollum told me to come early if I wanted to see them play, so I took him at his word. They drew the number on seed. If the draw hadn't been public, people would have said it was rigged, but it wasn't.

I was amused at the presence of a fellow who kept following me around during the meet. Somehow he learned that I write this stuff. and he kept suggesting things that ought to go into the Bystander. One was that we should fuss about the lack of minorities in the meet. After I explained to him that the thing was open to anyone who wanted in, and that our Hilltop meet was open to everybody, he wondered why more of us didn't enter. So did I.

Anyhow, it was interesting to watch the number one seed get upended by the number two seed. Buckley and Nagel seemed to me that they just were not really ready for a tough match, while Arden Stokstad and Barb Johnson came to play.

Then the presence of about a dozen Drake tennis players on the sidelines didn't help the top seeds.

Several people asked me about our Hilltop and wanted entry blanks. You'd be surprised at the interest in the women's division by people. We might have a tough meet after all.

And while all this was going on, there was a heavyweight fight being held in South Africa that put big John Tate into the picture as a contender. Tate stopped the South African heavyweight who was supposed to be a leading contender for the crown. The fellow better be glad that he wasn't in there with Larry Holmes.

If you haven't read it, you will soon, that Leon Spinks is working hard for a comeback or another shot at the crown he dumped to Muhammad Ali. If the stories from his camp are to be believed, he really means business this time.

It was a dull week nationally for me, but interesting locally.

realizing where the action is in the U.S. It most certainly is not in the ghetto. The ghetto is a romantic type of existence and culture I as a young person so strongly lived and believed. I remember it being very appealing because it gave you a chance to rip and run, get high, fool around with the ladies or whatever. But you end up paying for that fooling around. It always is easier for the men to break away from the responsibilities but the women can't because they are the ones who have to deal with the families.

"Young minorities have to realize that they'll be around this society for a long time, longer than any of the people they will have to live around and see.

Blacks and other minorities are at the stage where they have an enormous energy source to pull from to complete their struggle. It is now when we can shape our own future. We need to save grace and develop that potential that exists within our community."

Baker says blacks are fooling themselves if they think education is solely the key to ending their problems in this country. He says blacks cannot assimilate in society like the Jews simply because of their skin complexion. He says blacks for the most part in America, like that of South Africa, are considered inferior.

He says too many taboos still exist about blacks which ultimately boil down to racism. The young lawyer and mathematician says young blacks shouldn't think that gaining a profession and dominating it will set you free. He says this society with its prejudices and discrimination only lets minorities go as far as they think they should go and only a few will get high level positions.

"What blacks should be seeking is eliminating prejudice in this country, that is what the movement of the 1960's was about. Racism won't ever go away until we demand and fight for it to leave this society. Gasoline, energy are all non - emotional issues, but the changing of attitudes is something that takes a lot of energy to alter. Racism in America is the biggest permanent issue today and probably will be in the future. We have by no means finished our task."
