Warner Jackson: Journalist On The Way Up

by

Stephanie L. Michael
During the mid 1960's the broadcasting and newspaper industry were searching diligently for blacks who wanted to enter the media profession. This search primarily came about as a result of the riots and unrest of black Americans in their own communities. During the uprisings for the most part, blacks would not let white reporters and cameramen cover the events.

But the few exceptions that were allowed to cover the unrest gave the nation a distorted and unsensitive view to social conditions leading up to the rioting and the event itself.

The Kerner Commission report also was another reason the American news media opened its door. The commission released significant figures and information, basically criticizing and giving recommendations to the industry in a variety of ways. Two areas were given special attention by the group, the training and the hiring of blacks.

Taking a look back more than a century ago, the figures show that the number of blacks in the profession has dropped sharply. Research provided by university studies and national journalist organizations show many black journalists feel they were pressured out of the business in one of three ways: By being fired, office politics of discrimination and ultimately being black-listed by a particular firm.

Today the industry most lacking in meeting minority quotas is the newspaper / magazine industry, but the entire media industry has only about 600 to 700 black journalists nationwide. Many black journalist organizations say that estimated figure is too high and does not give a fair representation of the number of black journalists who have dropped out from the profession.

In Des Moines there are about 8 to 10 professional black journalists in the city. Estimating from that figure, two are newspaper reporters and five are radio or tv broadcasters working for local stations. The remaining number of broadcasters stand in line with other black producers, camera operators and professional freelancers in the city.

But despite all odds, one Des Moines journalist is working 100 percent to make sure the people in the city get professional news and sports coverage. Warner J. Jackson is a local sports anchor for KCBC who believes he has a lot

Self-Development Of People Funds Three Local Projects

The Self-Development of People Committee of the United Presbyterian Church, Des Moines Presbytery, recently funded programs of three local agencies using money raised through the One Great Hour of Sharing offering.

These agencies receiving funds included Citizens for Community Improvement (CCI) which received $3,200, the Minority Radio Station received $5,105, and the Oakridge Young Worker's Council which was awarded $1,000.

Paul Battles accepted the check for CCI, a grassroots coalition of individuals and interest groups seeking to improve communication between communities of need and business, public and legislative sectors.

The Minority Radio Station, represented by Jo Anna Cheatom, is a black owned and operated station featuring various ethnic, cultural and religious programming directed toward the black community.

Sr. Margaret Toomey represented the Oakridge Youth Workers Council, a program through which young people in the Parkridge Complex may work and use their skills within their facility for hourly wages. It is designed to teach practical application of skills and responsibility as well as provide for the children an opportunity for self-satisfaction from earning their own money and seeing their accomplishments.

It is the goal of the self-development of People Committee to fund projects in the local community which include direct involvement and empowerment of the community of need, and will help this community of need to obtain a voice and the ultimate control of their own destinies.

IEWS and REVIEWS

by Allen Ashby

I don't think there ever was a president who had as much trouble with Congress as President Carter. From the very beginning he can't seem to get anything through both houses as he wants it passed. Two years he came out with an energy bill that may or may not have eased our present plight.

He got nothing and still gets nothing in the way of an energy bill. I don't know enough about things to take a stand on the decontrol of oil prices, but based on what I have read, I wonder if it will turn out as the man thinks it will. I recall one time when he made a major proposition that was televised, and before he finished speaking, people were saying it would never work and would never pass Congress.

His Salt treaty is in trouble, I think, mainly because next year is an election year and it will gather votes to be able to "stand up to the Russians." And to make matters worse, there is a full fledged movement to draft Ted Kennedy that is gaining momentum daily. Kennedy has stated that he will not run, but he hasn't said it like this. "If nominated, I shall not campaign. If elected, I shall not serve." And that is what it will take for the movement to stop.

Israel has gone against the Camp David agreement by refusing to do away with settlements in the Gaza Strip, and by constantly raiding what they call the PLO camps. These raids leave scores, perhaps hundreds of innocent women and children dead or homeless, and we never hear about them except from the Palistinians.

The Israilie government thinks it can over the head of Carter to the Congress and get just about anything it wants.

We have the spectacle of the Rhodesians taking their case to Congress and the American public. There is enough of the sentiment in the country that the Rhodesian election was fair, because the blacks got to vote, or were made to vote. This is like we were told in the sixties. "You can buy a house anywhere you want to now." But were you able to get a job that would let you make the money you needed to buy that house?

It was the same in jobs. Just try to break into a good job. Now some of us can break into them, but it wasn't always so. The prevailing sentiment in America about anything black is that they have gotten enough and should be satisfied. So, now that the Rhodesian blacks have gotten the vote, they should be satisfied. They should not expect everything. Just as we in America should not expect everything white people have.

This is the feeling behind all these law suits against anything that helps blacks. Everybody jumps onto the band wagon, crying reverse discrimination. And all any of us blacks any where in the world want is to be treated like human beings, and respected as such. Is that asking too much?

Our President is kicked around for taking his stand on human rights, and because he told it like it is about the elections in Rhodesia, there is a powerful group in Congress that wants to put those black people in their place, although they would deny it and swear and be damned that is isn't so. Now, you ask yourself what would Ted Kennedy do under these same circumstances.

The polls show Carter way down, because of the gas shortage and the way special interests are coming on. You no longer have two political parties. Now it is the single issue, Abortion, Gasoline, "forced busing, Integration, and such." These interests cut across party lines, and since Carter tries to look at them objectively he is in big trouble. 1980 should be an interesting year.

A. PHILLIP RANDOLPH (CONCLUSION)

One of Randolph's most recent contributions to the AMERICAN Civil Rights movements was his work in organizing and leading the 1963 March on Washington D.C. which was a strong factor in the passage of the Civil Rights Act of the next year. In assessing the importance of the March, one must keep something in mind. In the first place, as much as Americans may sympathize with the conditions of the oppressed, they have historically been unfavorably disposed to public displays of protest. Even strong political supporters of the Black cause, including President Kennedy, opposed the March (because of its possible effect of impeding the civil rights legislation he had proposed). The civil rights movement was then faced, according to Bayard Rustin, with three challenges. In the first place, the civil rights movement had to articulate its demands in a manner which Americans would understand and approve. Secondly, it had to overcome the reservations many had about tactics. And, third, it had to win the struggle for civil rights legislation.

It succeeded for a number of reasons, many of which had their origins in the mind of A. Phillip Randolph. First, it was the product of sound political philosophy and intelligent, responsible strategy. The Marchers adhered strictly to Randolph's philosophy of non-violence, and the political program upon which the March was founded was broad enough to solicit a positive reponse from most segments of the American population. Secondly, and perhaps most importantly, it had an interracial character. Its program was directed to the poor and oppressed of all races, as it sought job training, full employment, a substantial increase in the minimum wage, and a greater housing program. As Randolph stated in his address at the March, "... this civil rights revolution is not confined to the Negro, nor is it confined to civil rights for our white allies know they cannot be free while we are not, and we know we have no future in a society in which six million Black and white people are unemployed and millions live in poverty." Finally, it was an expression of the unity which existed not only within the civil rights movement but within the broader liberal political and social spectrum. With the exception of James Farmer (who, although jailed in Plaquemine, La., sent a message to the marchers), every major civil rights leader in the country was present at the March, along with representatives from a wide range of liberal, labor and religious organizations.

Perhaps his last major contribution to the civil rights movement was the Freedom Budget, a ten year plan to erase poverty, proposed in 1966. One of the major reasons that the civil rights movement was so successful in its early stages was that a majority of the American public was willing to support almost any program which had little or no social cost. At that point in time implementing programs for voting rights and equal access to public facilities for all Americans required little sacrifice from society. That support faltered, when civil rights leaders like Randolph proclaimed the need for manpower development, full employment, and the guarantee of adequate housing for all Americans. Randolph's offering was designed "...to

UPENDING THE CONSTITUTION

To some, Justice Thurgood Marshall's rare but stinging public criticism of his Supreme Court colleagues for upending the Constitution on a number of far-reaching questions was long overdue. Speaking at a judicial conference in Buck Hill Falls, Pa., on May 27, he charged the Court with giving "insufficient protection to constitutional rights" in two far-reaching decisions concerning libel claims against the news media and jailed defendants.

The two cases that Marshall used to draw public attention to his concern touch very fundamental rights of the individual. Their scope is all encompassing. They transcend civil rights or racial issues and questions of equal protection for minority citizens. Whites and blacks, the rich and the powerful (in one case CBS television) as well as the poor and weak are affected. The rights of those who historically have regarded themselves as the specially privileged as well as the traditional victims of discrimination and exploitation are being trampled in skewed judicial reasonings.

Reinforcing the credibility of Justice Marshall's concerns is the fact that these were not cases with which he had been identified during his brilliant career as NAACP Special Counsel. Then, as he sought to make the Constitution meaningful and relevant to the racially oppressed, he led in developing a whole new segment of legal opinions that resulted in the Brown v. Board of Education decision outlawing "separate but equal" facilities.

Black Americans and their white supporters rejoiced in 1954 when the NAACP won that landmark victory. Until Richard Nixon appointed Chief Justice Burger and three other Justices to the Court, Americans of goodwill had every reason to be confident that a new era in American justice had been established. But by first sending up the names of Clement F. Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell as nominees to fill vacancies on the Supreme Court, Mr. Nixon made it painfully clear the extent to which he was willing to go to alter drastically the forward course of the nation's highest judicial tribunal.

Thanks to the NAACP and its allies in Washington and across the nation, the Senate rejected Messrs. Haynsworth and Carswell. But he succeeded in a very rare historical happening in naming four other Justices to the Court.

Last September, in addressing the Associated Press Managing Editors Conference in Portland, Ore., I called attention to the irony of the Court's backward slide on issues affecting the rights of the press as well as minorities.

The U. S. news media then was rightfully angry over the Supreme Court's decision giving police license to rummage and rifle newspaper offices. I said then: "In some real way you can now understand first-hand the kind of anxiety civil rights groups felt when the Burger Court was delicately balancing the rights to which blacks were entitled under the 14th Amendment and the 1964 Civil Rights Act against Alan Bakke's claims of 'reverse discrimination.'"

Speeding along its reactionary course, the Court ruled that the University of California at Davis Medical School had unconstitutionally barred Bakke from its special admissions program even though it said that race can be considered in certain circumstances.

It was then clear, I told the AP editors, that, "A conservative court that will compromise on the clear mandates" on civil rights "will just as easily strike out at the press if a significant enough public clamor arises in this land to curb your freedom."

By ruling in Herbert V. Lando that a plaintiff can examine the "state of mind" of newsmen and editors even in editorial conferences, the Court now leaves no doubt about the extent to which it will go in curbing First Amendment Rights. The other troubling opinion involved giving constitutional sanction to over-crowded jails. Heaven help the poor, who so often cannot afford bail. Or, to use Justice Marshall's words, "For a prisoner in jail, that ain't funny."

The NAACP therefore joins Mr. Marshall in his view that, "Ill conceived reversals (of lower courts' opinions) should be considered as no more than temporary interruptions."

Presently before the Court is another affirmative action challenge, Brian Weber v. Kaiser Aluminum. Black Americans await that judgment with well-considered trepidation.

A Black Look At Politics

William S. Morris

The American Political System has been undergoing profound changes in its nature for the last twenty years or so. Causal factors include an ever-increasing Congressional backlog, delegated authority to administrators, especially at the Federal level, and an overall decline in Congress' ability to function as a legislative branch of government.

For black Americans in particular, this means an increasingly unresponsive government, where elected representatives are less able to satisfy the demands of their constituents — and all this at a time when political and social conservatism is sweeping the nation, as evidenced by recent election defeats of incumbent black and liberal white Congressmen.

As a recent Honors Graduate from the Department of Political Science at the University of Iowa, I feel it most crucial that black Americans sit down and re-evaluate their political position in this country, recognizing that traditional avenues of political participation may no longer be salient by 1979. Large black voter turnouts, for instance, seem a thing of the past, as black Americans are being split, to an ever-greater degree, by socioeconomic class differences.

Many middle class blacks no longer feel a need to vote along traditional lines on issues such as busing, unemployment, and taxes, for their interests (and lifestyles) more closely approximate those of their predominately white neighbors, than those of poorer, inner-city (largely black) inhabitants. Similarly, partially as a result of changes in the nature of our political system, voting has become pretty much symbolic behavior, though this is confined mostly to the National level.

By and large, few voters perceive any real choice as to candidates, and thus we are witnessing huge declines in voter turnout at most elections. Also, public approval of Congressional performance is at an all-time low. Since, for the most part, only the relatively wealthy are in any financial position to run for public office, it has been the case that, since roughly 1783, only men of "property and standing" have been elected to office.

In America, one's capabilities and accomplishments have almost always been measured by the amount of one's material possessions, no matter how superficial. Thus, the old line, "Of course the rich are different - they have money." Political interests tend to cluster around socioeconomic status levels; high unemployment, for instance, does not bother the professional, or the well-employed very much, especially since it tends to reduce the rate of inflation.

The question then becomes, with energy costs and inflation skyrocketing, will blacks be able to prevent the nation's policy-makers from deliberately plunging our economy into another recession, when most black people have only recently recovered from the last one?

With black Americans already drastically under-represented in both the House and the Senate (there are no black Senators at present), are we in any position to affect the policy-making process, especially with dangerously high levels of black political apathy extant?

Yes, we are, if we force ourselves to reexamine our political position, and the options available to black Americans. With a noted decline in the significance of voting, coupled with a rise in the amount of delegated authority accorded bureaucrats in the implementation of policy, it becomes clear that blacks must acquire a larger percentage of administrative positions at both the National and local levels.

Too, organizations such as the NAACP and the National Urban League must shift their lobbying emphasis from Congressmen to administrative heads, for it is the latter group which, through putting policies into action, determines the success or failure of so many programs. This is even more crucial in times of dwindling budgets for most state and Federal aid programs.

Some of the suggestions posed above, as to the multitude of political problems confronting black Americans by 1979, may seem incomplete, or even simplistic. I firmly believe, however, that blacks must recognize the dangers inherent in failing to react to political changes in this country.

During the next several weeks, I shall address a variety of problems, both at the National and state (Iowa) levels, which affect black Americans socially and economically, as well as politically. While the United States has clearly evolved into what political scientists call a "postindustrial" society (to be more fully defined at a later date), some parts of this country remain stuck in other time periods.

Inner-city areas have huge populations of structurally unemployed black youths, whom technology and education have abandoned. In my next column, I will deal with the political aspects of black unemployment, and propose some possible alternatives to such short term job programs as CETA, which seem so ineffectual. Relatedly, I shall discuss how employment opportunities for minorities become increasingly scarce in a state like Iowa, which has a conservative political leadership, where there are relatively few black residents, where qualified blacks are leaving the state in greater numbers (a definite long-term statistical trend), and where white businesses have no real desire to hire and train black Iowans, preferring to "import" a black employee from an out-of-state branch.

All this relates to politics and policy, and that's what this column is about.

abolish poverty, stressing a full-production economy and massive infusions of federal funds to housing, health care, education, jobs, environmental control, etc." A broad range of liberal, labor, civil rights, and religious individual and organizations endorsed the Freedom Budget, at least conceptually. But, a number of 'liberals' closely identified with the peace movement (which had broad ties to the civil rights movement) refused to endorse the Freedom Budget because it did not call for massive cutbacks in defense spending. Some even stated that poverty could be abolished without increased economic growth or the massive infusion of federal funds into programs designed to help the poor. As was the case with similar proposals of the erasing society's problems, the Freedom Budget, along with its author, faded out of the civil rights picture and were replaced by younger and more militant people and ideas as typified by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Although his Freedom Budget did not attract the national attention it should have, its influence and its directions have been and will be felt and seen as America progresses toward what Randolph hoped would be a bright future for Black America.

When he died last May 16, at the age of 90, the leadership of civil rights movement in this country lost a quiet, yet effective voice for equality. Randolph believed that the organized labor movement and its program would and should bear the burden for bringing Blacks into the social and economic mainstream of society. His guiding principle which carried throughout his life was the achievement of change through peaceful means. It is ironic that some civil rights leaders during the more militant 1960's criticized him for his patience and willingness to move forward slowly even in view of the fact that he became one of the most effective advocates of racial equality long before they were born and never abandoned his faith in such tactics. Although his career was eclipsed in later years by many other Black leaders, his was still an insistent voice for moderation. He was often critical of the AFL-CIO for its treatment of Black workers, but throughout remained convinced that trade unionism was the salvation for social wrongs. He outlasted most of his critics, but saw the union he helped to organized fade into obscurity along with the railroads, and saw the flame of civil rights dim and flicker by the complexities of white flight from central cities, school busing and reverse discrimination. But difficulties like that never stopped him. A Bayard Rustin, Randolph's longtime aide recalled "...he was always saying, 'What's the next job we have to do?'...he didn't look back...he always looked ahead."

Affirmative action is the practical application of constitutional rights.

Corrects Story

Dear Sir:

This is in reference to an article that appeared in the Iowa Bystander on May 10, 1979, entitled "Continued Quest for Upgrading Aid Programs at University of Iowa." Along with other members of Special Support Services at the University of Iowa, I was interviewed by Robert Morris. I am quite perturbed by the following paragraph in the article:

Other administrators which the SEC members visited were Angelita Reyes, a academic development specialist and Benjamin Bates, coordinator of academic support programs. Ms. Reyes, a beautiful dark-skinned lady from Honduras...

It's strange and obvious that the writer of this article didn't mention the skin color and esthetic quality of anyone else he interviewed at Special Support Services. I am not flattered by this.

In addition, he did not write the correct information: I did not tell him I am from Honduras. He was told that my father is, hence, the Hispanic name. A public correction should be made in your newspaper. This article was brought to the attention of not only the staff of SSS but other University departments as well and the Iowa City Community, a correction is merited.

Yours truly,
Angelita Reyes

This is a request for some assistance.

My name is Wesley Carter, at present I'm incarcerated at the London Correctional facility in London, Ohio, and would very much like to correspond with some of your readers.

Unemployment Focus Of Black Press Convention

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—Black unemployment and the racial implications of the energy crunch will be the focal points of the 39th Annual Convention of the National Newspaper Publishers Association—The Black Press of America—June 13-16 in Tulsa Okla.

These two areas, said NNPA President John H. Sengstacke in making the convention announcement last week, are the major concerns of our readers who know that nearly 15 percent of our people are jobless, and who themselves face the energy crunch at the gasoline pump and in their electric and fuel bills.

Among those who will discuss the unemployment problem at the Tulsa convention at the Williams Plaza Hotel are: Benjamin Hooks of the NAACP, Vernon Jordan of the National Urban League, Charles L. Brown, chairman of the board of A T & T; Ms. Alexis Herman, director of the Women's Bureau; and Lloyd N. Hand, president of the National Alliance of Businessmen; Robert W. Morrow, vice president of ITT Continental Baking Company.

The energy crunch and how it hurts blacks will be discussed by Robert Sellers, chairman of the board of Cities Services; Jesse L. George, Jr., president of the Williams Exploration Company; Thomas D. Walker of Gulf Oil Corporation; and Wilson Goode, chairman of the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission.

Featured activities of the convention will include an address by former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California, who is running hard for the Republican nomination for the presidency, and the presentation of the "the Black Press Man of the Year Award" to U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young to the United Nations.

Opening greetings will be brought to the convention by Gov. George Nigh of Oklahoma, U.S. Senator David Boren of the state, and Mayor James Inhofe of Tulsa.

Climaxing the convention will be the presentation of $20,000 in Merit Awards to member newspaper publishers and staffers who were victorious in the 19-category contest with nearly 700 entries. And advertising awards will be made to AT&T, Chrysler, Heublein, Kellogg's, Miller Brewing Company and Quaker Oats.

Andrew Young Named "Man Of Year" By Black Press

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Ambassador Andrew Young to the United Nations has been chosen "Man of the Year" by the National Newspaper Publishers Association — the Black Press of America.

Announcement of the results of the mail-balloting was made this week by John H. Sengstacke, president of NNPA and editor-publisher of the Chicago Daily Defender, New Pittsburgh Courier, Michigan Chronicle and a half-dozen other newspapers.

The Distinguished Service plaque, honoring the "Man of the Year," will be presented to Ambassador Young during the 39th Annual NNPA Convention, June 13-16 in Tulsa, Okla., at the beautiful new Williams Plaza Hotel, said Mr. Sengstacke.

The other main highlights of the convention, the NNPA head explained, will be addresses by former Gov. Ronald Reagan of

But the focal points of the convention, Sengstacke emphasized, will be two symposia: "The Black Unemployment Problem" and "The Racial Implications of the Energy Problem."

Speakers on the unemployment problem will include: Charles Brown, chairman of the board of AT&T; Lloyd N. Hand, president of the National Alliance of Businessmen; Director Alexis Herman of the Women's Bureau; Ronald Brown, vice president of the National Urban League; and Rudolph Oswald, chief economic adviser of the AFL-CIO.

Blacks and the energy problem will be discussed by: Citco Chairman Robert Sellers, Hooks of the NAACP, and Williams Company President Barry Galt. The latter firm laid a large segment of the Alaska pipeline.

Others who will discuss the energy crisis will be: Dr. Barnard Anderson of the Rockefeller Foundation, Wilson Goode, chairman of the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission; and Thomas D. Walker of Gulf Oil Corporation.

Presentation of $20,000 in Merit Awards to publishers and newspaper staffers, and plaques to six major advertisers in the Black Press will climax the convention.

The advertising honorees are: ATT&T, Chrysler Corporation, Heubelin, Kellogg's, Miller Brewing Company, and Quaker Oats.

Soul... Food and Thought

Aldeen Davis

When jockey Eddie Arcaro and Citation crossed the finish line in the 1948 Kentucky Derby they broke the 57-year-old record of black Isaac Murphy. Murphy won his first derby astride Buchanan, in 1884. He was the first and only jockey to win the Churchill Downs classic three times until unseated by Arcaro. If it was quite a feat for a man of color to break into the world of horse-racing, a black man entering into the show horse world was unheard of. Yet, Tom Bass, a 1859 product of a Boone Co., Mo. slave cabin, did just that!

As a child Tom terrified the plantation farm hands, by playing with fearsome bulls, breaking and training unmanageable horses, all without the benefit of a bit or a whip. In the mid 1880's, horses was a big business and men knowledgeable in breeding and training horses were in big demand, Tom was such a man.

Tom left the Bass farm in 1879, going to Mexico, Missouri, the heart of the saddle horse industry. Here he began work training horses for the Potts and Clark stables. Tom felt that nothing ruined horses more than improper biting, and he put his theory to practice with a fine black mare considered crazy, between his special touch and a newly designed bit (which is still sold and known as the Tom Bass bit)

he developed this mare into an outstanding performer; in fact it was on this mare that Tom made his debut in the show ring. There was a possibility of an incident if the black man competed in a sport for the gentry. Riders glanced at Tom with some curiosity but there was no incident. Although they only placed second on this initial outing by late in the season he was accepted by the top showman of the circuit, and as to be expected there were racial slurs, etc., but Bass always retaliated by winning. In 1883 Potts and Clark dissolved their stables, and Tom began his own stables! In 1882 Tom married Angie Jewel, and though he had all the potential for greatness he had no polish, and it was here that Angie took over adding money management and bookkeeping skills. Even though he had a limited third grade education he had a system: He never completed a deal without pretending to "think it over." He would count out the number of corn kernals equal to the transaction, then take away the number he had coming — laborious but failure proof.

He lived for a while in Kansas City, Mo., where he helped organize the horse show that was later to become the American Royal. Bass and a young mare, Miss Rex, were named First World champion of the Columbian Exposition at the Chicago Worlds Fair in 1892 where he met Grover Cleveland and became his life-long friend.

While Bass was able to move in higher circles than his black counterparts, the men with whom he competed or advised in horse transactions would expect him to present himself at their back doors or eat with the kitchen help and sleep in coachmans quarters, so Tom avoided restaurants, bars, etc., and channeled all business and social transactions to his home where he had Angie and immunity from society's color line.

Tom's clientele included August and Adolphus Busch (brewery barons) the Armour, Swift and Cudahy families (meat packing) Chicago's Marshall Field and the N. Y. Vanderbilts. When Theodore Roosevelt wanted a fine saddle horse he came personally to the Bass stables, Tom named a horse in honor of another friend, William McKinley. He was invited to ride in Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee.

Tom Bass' death in 1934, marked the end of a special time, in saddle horse history, the era of one man who had no documentation of his own birth but dominated an industry in which certificates of breeding was of greater importance.

No that tough steak you had last evening was not Horse meat, but you could do worse. No "slop" and rancid mud hole for a horse, no scraps and dirty pans or stagnant water, but the horse with all its cleanliness will not be found on menus offering fine cuisine. So I will not invite the wrath of Humane Societies by giving you Roast of Horse but how about Bear Steak?

2 lbs. bear steak (1 - 1½" thick), red wine marinade, ¼ C. vegetable oil, salt, pepper, sage, 4 lrg. onions sliced thin, ½ stick oleo. Trim off all fat. Marinade at least 24 hrs. Turning often and pricking with a fork. Drain and pat dry. Brush with oil on both sides, sprinkle with salt, pepper and sage. Broil 15 minutes on both sides or until well done. Saute' onions in butter and serve on top.
Serve with a side dish of hominy.

Democrats Want More Black Participation

The Democratic National Committee Black Caucus met on May 25th to voice its concerns over the decline in party participation by Black Americans. The Caucus urged Chairman John C. White to increase the D.N.C.'s programs aimed at Black voters. The Caucus cited the continuing decline of voter registration and participation totals among Black Americans.

Chairman John White

said recent staff reductions were due to the D.N.C.'s need to "rid itself of past election campaign debts". The Caucus members were sympathetic, but they reiterated the critical need to improve the Committee's programs.

The Black Caucus in conjunction with the Hispanic Caucus passed a resolution which was adopted by the D.N.C. Executive Committee requiring the D.N.C. to develop a Training School and Voter Registration program effort. They asked that plans and budget be reviewed and adopted at the next D.N.C. meeting.

Later that afternoon President Carter addressed the Caucus and other D.N.C. members where he voiced his concerns for the nation's current energy crisis. The President stressed the need for the party and the country to unite in the battle to solve the nation's energy problem.

Fultz Seeks Mayor Post

Des Moines attorney and businesswoman Karla Fultz Monday announced her candidacy for the office of Mayor of Des Moines.

In a morning press conference at Ramada Inn Downtown, Fultz cited a number of reasons for deciding to run:

"I believe my eleven years of experience in the public and private sectors demonstrates my ability as a proven and prudent decision maker. The scope of this experience has convinced me that a Mayor of Des Moines must have the ability to influence and lead the total community — from those in need, those in the social and economic mainstream, to the leaders of business, industry, and government. I believe my experience, optimism and enthusiasm put me clearly in that position."

Also announced at the press conference was the appointment of Louis I. Nussbaum, President, Investment Consulting Services, Inc. and retired partner of Peat Marwick & Mitchell Co., as finance chairman for the Fultz campaign.

Fultz, a Polk County native, was formerly Assistant County Attorney and Special Prosecutor for Sex Crimes. In that capacity, she compiled an unprecedented 82% record for convictions. Fultz was also co-organizer of the Polk County Rape Crisis Center, founded in 1974 to increase convictions of sex offenders and aid their victims.

More recently, she served as Referee of the Juvenile Court. During a two-year period, she heard some 2500 cases, and was responsible for making judicial decisions affecting the well-being of these young people and their families.

Currently, Fultz serves as co-publisher of the Highland Park News. She is also a partner in the Des Moines law firm of Stevens, Price and Fultz.

She and her husband Bill have eight children.

Daughters Of Des Moines

The members of The Daughter's of Des Moines club met with Frances Scales, in May with the club's president, Ella Thomas, presided.

The Daughter's will not have a business meeting for June, but will hold their annual Birthday Party, at Bishops Cafe, on Fluer Drive on June 16, 1979. After they have dined they will journey to the home of Barbara Robinson, finish the evening, by exchanging Birthday Gifts, without revealing the names.

The next business meeting will be at the home of Edna Prince.

NAACP Plans To Reduce Black Teenage Unemployment

Benjamin L. Hooks, Executive Director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has announced a nationwide program to secure jobs for over 175,000 unemployed Black teenagers. The goal represents almost half of the estimated 380,000 jobless Black youth in the nation.

The plan is based on fostering a working relationship between the National Alliance of Business (NAB), the nation's predominately Black colleges, and the NAACP. "We are calling for a tripartite relationship between three uniquely qualified American institutions," Hooks said.

"First the business community, as represented by the NAB, which has already demonstrated their awareness of corporate responsibility and commitment to minority unemployment problems. Next, the historically Black colleges who have always provided the majority of this country's Black talent pool; and the NAACP whose traditional commitment to minority youth problems need no elaboration."

Hooks said he was asking each of the top Fortune 1300 companies to either hire one Black youth for every ten million dollars in gross revenue, or to hire one percent of their domestic work force from within the minority youth community. He said it would be the role of the Black colleges to provide the leadership in working with these youngsters, "since their 180,000 member student body for the most part are directly tied to the targeted group through relationship or friendship."

MESSIAH TEMPLE

Messiah Temple had church last Sunday! The Lord blessed beyond the limit we had placed on Him in the past. We were witnesses to the power of His mercy and His healing of not only the body, but of the soul and spirit as well. Evangelist Zora Reed was not only with us last Sunday, but was able to bring the message from the pulpit after her close brush with death last week.

The lesson that she brought was on "The Right Attitude". Our attitudes shape our actions. By having the right attitude, we can be doers and not just believers in the Lord. We bind ourselves and the Lord by not accepting the authority of the person above us. We bind ourselves and the Lord by not serving others as Christ did. If we want to be chief, we must become servants instead of someone to be waited upon.

Sunday school is at 10:30 with worship services at 11:30. Bible study will be Sunday evening at 7:00. Prayer meeting at study will be Wednesday evening at 7:00. Reverend Jacob Reed, Pastor.

REMEMBER: Our attitude will show regardless of how we try to hide it. It can bind our actions in the Lord, or it can make us free in the Lord. The choice is ours.

WITH THE NAME OF GOD, THE GRACIOUS, THE COMPASSIONATE

Last week we discussed the television documentary "Scared Straight" and in general, the growing problem of juvenile delinquency. Many valuable lessons can be learned from "Scared Straight" that the entire society should take note of. We witnessed prisoners (who, in fact are grown up juvenile delinquents) showing human compassion for young offenders.

Even though their manner of expression might lead some to believe otherwise. What we saw were men genuinely concerned for the well being of those youths who were fast approaching the harvest of their deeds — Prison life.

Possibly the most significant thing about "Scared Straight" is that it gave the public a candid view of the harsh realities of prison life. Leaving no doubt in my mind that the majority of our prisons are without the element of a true rehabilitation process. It is virtually impossible to be rehabilitated in the same kind of environment that resulted in the arrest and subsequent incarceration of the offender.

The only difference is that the prison environment is closed leaving no place for a person to flee such hellish conditions if they wanted to. They are locked into it — drugs, homosexuality, homosexual rape, assault, robbery and even slavery. If the prison environment cannot be made reasonably safe for an offender to do time — then they cannot be rightly called correctional facilities simply because such facilities are more conducive to maintaining criminal behavior than correcting it. And believe me dear people — the type of prison life depicted in "Scared Straight" happens everyday right here with the penal institutions in Iowa. What can be done?

We need more involvement from the greater community — more involvement from the ministers, religious groups and social groups. We must provide the incarcerated with a second chance and we must help them to help themselves so that they qualify to meet the responsibilities that go with a second chance. We must seek alternatives to the antiquated prison structures that presently exist and we must remove ourselves from the fearful, vengeful and apathetic attitudes that we presently hold toward the incarcerated.

We are very quick to give aid to and hire Vietnamese refugees and others who come from war torn areas throughout the world. But how fast will you aid and hire an ex-convict who got his start in crime as a direct result of a war torn family or war torn community riddled with poverty, ignorance and crime? We cannot be isolated from our responsibilities to each other. Please don't misconstrue what I'm saying — I am not an advocate for the pacification of prisoners.

They must do their time for crimes committed against society — But we must also get at the root of the problem and work to get prisoners to come to grips with this reality in order to effect positive change for everyone involved. If we are successful, we will have helped in the salvaging of human life. Bring a positive contribution to our society and save the taxpayers a great deal of money (It cost $17,000+ to maintain one inmate per year).

Think about it —

May God bless you all with the light of understanding.

As-Salaam-Alaikum
(Peace be unto you)
Shahid A. Muhammad

CCI Hosts Senior Citizen Meeting

On June 4, 1979, Citizens for Community Improvement Model Cities Senior Citizens hosted a Senior information meeting at the Model Cities Center with guests being, Linda Curtis from Social Services, Tom Brandt from Neighborhood Development, and Suzanne Rousseau from MTA.

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss Senior Services in the Model Cities area, such as transportation and funding. When asked about funding, Mr. Tom Brandt said the Model Cities Center had received $18,000.00 in funds, but the funds would expire June 30, and that a request could be made to the Central Advisory Board to make a recommendation to the City Council for a continuance. He also added that with a request from the Model City Senior Center through Neighborhood Development to the City Council, an extension could be made so that the Center could operate past June, as long as funds held out.

On the subject of transportation Miss Rousseau said the MTA transportation service would be equal if not better than that already provided by the Model City Center. Their use of vans and cabs would enable the Seniors to continue going to congregate meals, and shopping and emergency trips. MTA will have bus tickets for those who show that they would rather use the Public bus and are able to do so, but would have to receive a letter from Social Services showing they are eligible.

Social Services will be working with MTA and the Model Cities Seniors very closely. Mrs. Linda Curtis from Social Services said they have a list of Seniors who now

Mr. Kenneth Riedel from Social Services and Mr. Earl Henderson from Polk County were also invited but did not show up, but with the information we received from Linda Curtis also from Polk County, Mr. Herman Lewis, Board Chairman for Model Cities was able to come to the decision to look into the matter about an extension of funds for the M.C. Senior Center, since he knows that MTA will take over transportation and Social Services will make sure all Seniors are served.

ON SPORTS

We sit here and wonder what we can write about. Sometimes I think writing a column was easier when things were seperated. We had our baseball leagues, basketball leagues and teams, track meet and our football team.

And about the only ink all these things got was when some of us would write up the stuff and carry it down to the daily paper, and then it would be edited so it wasn't always recognized. About the only break we got was when the late Jack North would let me bring my stuff in and run it as it was written.

Why? I don't know. Then I remember that there

State Junior College and Moorehead State University in Minnesota. While going to school to get his degree, Jackson says he worked all sorts of odd jobs until he got a chance to work at the Moorehead school station. The same university where he got his B.S. in mass communications.

"I had to leave the University of Minnesota, it was just too big a school for me, but when I transferred to Moorehead it was a whole different story. I began to do play-by-play sports and public service type programs and getting the needed beginning experience to break professionally into the business after school. The type of training and criticism I got while working let me know I was good enough and had the potential to making it. I knew then, just as I know now this is the business for me, this is what I want to do for the rest of my life."

Warner just recently moved to Des Moines. He says there are some definite difference between the Minneapolis and Des Moines market.

"Everywhere a broadcaster goes there is a certain amount of competition, it's just more competitive in some of the larger metropolitan areas than others. In Des Moines, I want to get as much of the listening audience as I can. I think this city is a good place for me, it's not too big, and it's still friendly. That's the way I try to be when presenting the news — friendly, but factual. I try to put together an informative, professional and entertaining sports cast. It's important to me to do that with all my work regardless whether it's sports or other news events. I like to add a little humor to my sports casts, simply because that's a part of my personality. But I do know when to have fun and when to be serious."

"I have realized while being here that everyone thinks I'm something unique. Yes, I am different, but so is everybody else. None of us are the same, be it dress, personality or whatever. There are very few black broadcasters in the city, but because of that reason I can't say I have been confronted by a lot of problems.

Des Moines is new to me and I'm learning my job as well as the town. I hope that people are recognizing me as a novelty because of my work, rather than skin color. I also have noticed that many people consider those of us in the broadcasting industry to be celebrities. I hope people don't think I am going to react aloof to them on the street. I think many times people get spooked and figure I'll not talk to them because of my job or I'll be phony. I won't, although I must admit there are many broadcasters that do have ego problems."

Before Jackson took his position at KCBC, he had another offer at a radio station in Waterloo. But he decided not to take the position because he felt the position in Des Moines would be more challenging and give him a chance to show his potential.

"Let's face it. Waterloo is a much more active and political city than Des Moines. They have lots of political fire going on up there. The particular station that was trying to recruit me was going to pay me a lot more money and pay for the majority of my travel expenses to cover sports events around the state. But I chose to come to Des Moines to see what Warner J. Jackson could do. I figured if I wanted to be a network television play-by-play sports announcer in the future, I had better get some good solid experience."

"I think another reason I chose Des Moines over Waterloo was because of the attitudes of two persons I met at KCBC. Both were times when he was supposed to cover a black event and he would ask me to do it for him because he had a prior commitment. That was always run unedited. Then black people all around wanted to know what people did in the games.

When one of the local schools played, the people on the street wanted to know what did So and So do. That must have been universal, because when I was in Chicago, I went to the football game between Phillips High, the public school champions and St. George, the Catholic school champs. St. George had a team that was big enough to be able to play today. Phillips had Buddy Young and Earl Banks who later starred at Iowa.

When I got back to the South Side of Chicago, people didn't care about the score. Everybody wanted to know, "What did Buddy Young do?" I didn't have to tell them that Phillips got the pants beat off them. They were happy that Buddy Young had scored the lone T.D. for his team.

And here whenever one of the high schools played, the question asked in the pool hall was what did the black folks do. So I could grind out columns about those guys no matter which side of the score they were on. I have always said that before 1946 black athletes made news by just showing up to play; they didn't even have to star.

men, Sid Shaw, general manager, and Mike Meacham, program director, approached me as nice and fair minded individuals. In this business that's really hard to find."

So far, Warner has covered a number of sports events around the city and has many plans for building up sports coverage at his station and ultimately boosting the ratings. He says he tries to get to know the people in the city and around the state to find out exactly what they want to hear from sports casters.

"I like to use a number of actualities during my sports casts. I think the people would prefer to hear the newsmaker talk rather than me. I feel good actualities makes all the difference to people. But I have noticed that some stations just go overboard with sound. I try to get an equal balance between the writing build-up and the actual voice of the newsmaker. I like to add flavor and excitement to each sports cast."

Jackson gives sports reports at 6:45, 7:45 and 8:45, Monday through Friday. He also does other air work from 2 to 6. One of the fun things he gets to do is host the disco session occasionally on the station. The session runs from 8 to 4 on Fridays and 6:30 to 4 a.m. on Saturdays. This Friday Warner will be the host of the Disco show. In the near future he'll be covering some other sports events, in particular, the Reames Tournament which will be held at Bomber Field in Johnston ... June 29 through July 1. Jackson will be giving play-by-play reports over KC 14.

Our Hilltop tennis meet got its coverage because I used to bring the results to the Register in longhand. I think they began to send people to cover the thing because they got tired of trying to decipher my handwriting.

Now in this age of million dollar contracts, black athletes are news according to what they do in their field. And then sometimes black people aren't aware of what is happening. For instance, how many people know that Arthur Ash has made over one hundred thousand dollars this year just playing tennis, and hasn't won that many meets. They read where the man got beat in the maybe third round of a big meet, and say the old man doesn't have it anymore. He is so decrepit that he ranks in the top twenty in the world.

I argue that anyone in that top twenty is capable of beating anyone else in that group at any time. So what I am probably trying to say is that maybe more young black athletes should look to tennis. There maybe their actions might make news, although I doubt it. And did you know that Lee Elder has won close to a hundred thousand at golf, and he has won just one meet. Then there is Pete Dane with nearly fifty thousand. You don't know about these things unless you are a fan of those sports. So, maybe I could find some news if I looked around.

Some of the nation's top baseball teams will be competing in the games.

In giving a little advice to young blacks who would like to enter the broadcasting profession. Jackson says he put forth a great amount of energy to get this far, which is about in the middle of his early journalism career.

"I have to give a lot of credit to my family, especially my mother who gave me support. It was not an easy time at all, even to get this far. I have worked part-time and full-time at 3 or 4 stations in several cities in Minnesota. You have to realize early that traveling around is essential if you want to hit the big time. I think if you feel deep in your heart you have the ability, try to develop that talent. If you have the talent somebody somewhere will see the potential and give you the chance you need.

"Don't let anybody turn you around. There will always be office and social politics. But just learn to take those experiences and add them to your collection.

Take any and all jobs to get started in the business, after you get more established you can be a little more selective. You'll learn to know when a job is going to be right for you. But keep in mind too, that your first or even your second job might not work out, but just keep on trying. Also beware of the trap of always denying yourself, saying you're not ready for a larger market. You could be setting yourself up for a real downfall.... stagnation is the greatest enemy besides letting someone destroy your confidence.

Rights On Trial

Those involved with employment law, as with any specialty, have their abbreviations and acronyms. A favorite is a BFOQ which stands for Bona Fide Occupational Qualifications.

BFOQ's are very important in civil rights law, so important that if an employer can establish that a requirement is a BFOQ he can make it a condition of employment even through the requirement discriminates against minorities or women.

For instance, if a stage producer wants someone to play Juliet in Romeo and Juliet, the producer has a right to restrict the auditions to women. (However, as an example of how times and BFOQ's can change, in Shakespeare's own time ladies were not allowed on stage so Juliet would have been played by a young boy.)

It is in cases involving sex that the BFOQ's come into question, and courts are taking a more and more narrow view on what a BFOQ is.

Female protective laws such as maximum weights women can be required to lift have been superceded by the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

In Weeks vs. Southern Bell Telephone (1969) it was held that refusing to hire women as switchmen because the job was too "strenuous" for females, was illegal. The judge said that the company, to restrict such a job to me, "must have a reasonable basis for concluding that all, or substantially all women would be unable to perform the job."

In Diaz vs. Pan American World Airways (1971) the court ruled that sex was not a Bona Fide Occupational Qualification for a cabin attendant and the company's failure to hire men for that work violated Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Another airline case, Sprogis vs. United Airlines (1971) established that the airline couldn't apply a no marriage rule to the stewardesses and not to the stewards (or cabin attendants.) The judge said customer preference was not a sufficient reason to make being single a BFOQ.

The issue also came up in the landmark Griggs vs. Duke Power case, where the Duke Power Company wanted a high school diploma to be considered a BFOQ. Duke Power lost the argument because they couldn't show a relationship between having a high school diploma and performing well in most of the jobs in question.

In order for an employer to keep a job requirement that discriminates against minorities or women, that requirement must have a very strong relationship to the work the job requires; and if it goes to court, the burden of proof will be on the employer. The employer will have to show that the work can't be done unless the employee meets the requirement, the BFOQ.

Matthew A. Henson (1867-1955)

(Black Arctic Explorer)
"The natives called him "Miy Paluk" ... I was thrilled to shake the hand of this mortal ... To the Eskimos, who loved him, Matt was the greatest of all the men who came from the distant Land of the South ..."

—Peter Freuchen

Matthew Henson was a man who participated with Admiral Robert E. Peary in an "epoch-making discovery". After several years of struggling to find the North Pole by traveling over lands that were not yet chartered, Robert Peary, the famous scientist and explorer insisted that Matthew Henson accompany him on his final venture to locate that mystical point on the earth called the North Pole. In fact Peary said, "I cannot get along without him!"

At the tender age of twelve years Matthew Henson set out on his own and walked from Washington to Baltimore because he wanted to live and work with men who sailed ships. His parents were both dead and he grew tired of living with a lady he called his "Aunt" in Washington, D.C.

There he grew restless helping to wash dishes and keep her restaurant going. He told her repeatedly that he wanted to go away and find a ship. He had dreamed for a long time of "going to sea". Finally she gave the youth a dollar and wished him luck. Once he reached Baltimore and a Captain Childs heard his story he was hired as a cabin boy on a ship called the "Katie Hines". This ship was to be his "school" and his home. He had never attended public school.

From dishwasher to cabin boy and scholar

He could not remember his mother who had died when he was only two years old. He knew that he had mulatto ancestry. For several years he lived with "relatives" and a step-mother. He remembered those years as hard and unhappy times for him. Eventually he ran away to Washington where he asked for shelter with a lady named Janey. He later called her Aunt Janey.

She worked hard running a restaurant and was glad to give shelter to the hungry run-away who arrived at her cafe with rags wrapped around his feet. She listened sympathetically to his story of hard-luck and hard-living and then asked him if he could wash dishes. When young Matthew answered "Yes, ma'am". She replied, "You can stay and you have some work — washing dishes."

He was glad to have the opportunity to work for $1.50 a week and have his own small bed. Aunt Janey grew fond of him and considered his help too valuable for him to take any time out for school. Within a few months, he grew restless and wanted to move on.

Young Matt was registered as the cabin boy of the ship "Katie Hines" the day before it was to sail from Baltimore to Hong Kong. Captain Childs was leary about his age and decided to report it as fifteen and a half — instead of twelve years. Captain Childs had faith in Matt even though he was very young. He secured his first sailor's wear which consisted of "a pea jacket, sou'wester, boots and storm coat".

The new cabin boy was thrilled. The captain had another surprise for him — a pile of books, writing tables and a slate. Young Matt had to admit he wanted the books — but he did not yet know how to read. To his astonishment the captain promised him that he would teach him to read the books! Captain Childs worked each afternoon after "four bells" to help him learn to read and write.

This was a treasure that Matt had not expected to find. This salty sea captain was to open up the world for the new cabin boy. He later found out that some of the workers resented him because of his color. But the captain remained loyal to him and he was determined to be his teacher.

Young Matt spent five years sailing with Captain Childs on the ship, "Katie Hines". Many years later he counted these years as among the happiest. His memory was filled with the vision of the dark mahogany cabin which was his school room.

In that cabin he learned to write and read. He also studied geography, history, navigation and mathematics. The captain's favorite subjects were geography and navigation. His forty years of experience on ships made him an exciting teacher. The bond of friendship and affection between the two made them like father and son.
