Wilcots Accepted At West Point Military Academy

by Stephanie L. Michael

Starting July 1st the incoming fall freshman class at West Point Military Academy will be coming to Highland Falls, New York. Among the students will be 17 year old Kelly Wilcots, the first black woman graduate of Des Moines Technical High School to attend the Academy.

Ms. Wilcots, who graduated from Tech this spring first became interested in entering the military academy after becoming active in the ROTC program (Reserves Officers' Training Corps) at the high school.

"Beginning in my sophomore year I joined the ROTC program. I liked what the whole program offered, mostly leadership training and respect. Master Sergeant Chris Thompson helped me apply to West Point, fill out the forms and get the necessary recommendations and nominations. After sending the first set of papers in, there was a period of about two years where the school and I communicated back and forth. Sometimes I thought for sure I would get accepted, then there were other times when I thought I had better apply to Drake University."

In April, Kelly received word from West Point that she had been accepted for the fall semester and was alerted to the types of requirements and curriculum she would have to study in order to be a graduate of the school. Wilcots plans to be a political science major although she must take a number of first year requisite courses, such as engineering, mathematics, and weaponry. The potential academy graduate says she wants to be a politician after graduating from the school. More specifically she would like to become a senator.

"Right now I'm a Lieutenant Colonel in the ROTC program. I have one more rank to go before reaching the top position as Colonel. At West Point I will be required to take a language and I plan to take German. After my four years at the school I will be required to serve five years in the service. I want to be stationed somewhere in Europe, hopefully in Germany. My father was a staff sergeant in the Air Force when I was younger and we were stationed in Germany for a period of time. I feel I will like living in Germany and Europe in general."

Kelly is one of four children and the oldest female. She says she is very excited about attending the academy and is ready to do her best at the school.

"My family is excited about me receiving the honor, but they don't want me to leave. I know not very many blacks or women will be attending the school, but that doesn't bother me. I am taking the whole affair as a challenge. I've been around a variety of people so I'm not worried."

Wilcots says there will be a number of classes that will be very physical and will test her stamina. She says her self-confidence will also be tested.

"While in the ROTC program at Tech a number of the officers including myself attended a confidence course. This course was conducted in Virginia by the Marines. I think these types of courses are interesting and help prepare you. But I think the entire ROTC program is very beneficial for anyone, black women included.

"There is a matter of respect that is given to all officers, regardless of your skin color or sex. I think the program builds citizenship, leadership and academic ability that is needed to be successful. I think it is purely coincidental a number of participants in ROTC programs in high school go on to make the service a career. Many of the program participants are seeking to learn responsibility and discipline. I think this study helps them regulate their lives, better their skills and reach their goals. I think I will reach mine."

Support DMACC Tax Levy

The Woodland Willke Neighborhood Priority Board went on record last week to give full support to Des Moines Area Community College in its bid to continue the tax levy for capital improvements.

Overt Racism-Alive And Well In Iowa City

Racial discrimination once again raised its ugly head and reminded us of the past, in what could be called the most "overt" racist action in recent years in Iowa City. The white management of Woodfields Disco (a downtown night spot in Iowa City) barred the entrance from arriving black dancers.

The disco, which usually caters to a large number of blacks and whites, made it impossible for blacks to enter by applying a new entrance formality, to blacks only. They required blacks to show three "picture" identification cards with their birthdate on each one. At the same time whites passed through showing one, or no I.D.'s at all.

An angry crowd, at one time consisting of more than over 300 people, white and black, congregated on the parking lot side of the disco and the hostile atmosphere became more intense. People shocked at the display of racism milled around the entrance which was guarded by three, mace equipped door guards.

Spectators at the scene were amazed at what was taking place on the cool Saturday night of June 23. "For the first time in my life I was faced with outright racist activity and harassment of blacks," stated spectator Terry D. Butts. Another spectator, Michael R. Ackiss stated, "in a city of which there is so many people from different places, I can't believe such racism in a public atmosphere."

At this point there was no doubt that violence was near. Several times violence was avoided by blacks restraining blacks from attacking the white door guards.

Strangely enough no major incidents occurred due to the efforts of several blacks who calmed the crowd. Iowa City Police officers cruised the area, once zooming into the crowd with 6-8 cars, looking for a mysterious fight which did not occur. Spectator Robert Morris, along with others present, requested police check people inside the disco for age and three picture I.D.'s and put the results in their report, but the police refused to take such action.

Some Woodfields waitresses walked off their jobs refusing to accept the discriminatory policy and joined the angry crowd in the parking lot. A couple of concerned police officers entered the disco to further investigate the situation but having no legal basis, their efforts proved futile.

Saadig Running For Mayor

Kalonji Lumumba Saadiq Monday announced on the steps of City Hall his candidacy for mayor of Des Moines. Making his second bid for office, Saadiq said he is running as a Black Panther.

Saadig, 28, of 1072-14th, said better police — community relations, will be a major campaign issue. He said he is also interested in the acquisition of federal community development funds for a black radio station and the decriminalization of marijuana.

He joins four other candidates who will compete in the October 16 primary election. The others are: Councilman Russell LaVine, Councilwoman Elaine Szymoniak, former city administrator Peter Crivaro and lawyer Karla Fultz.

IEWS and REVIEWS

by Allen Ashby

This decade will go down in history as the age of strikes. Teacher's strikes, workers striking, truckers and, you name it and they will strike. I sometimes think that the mood is "Let's strike and then we will figure out what it is that we want." The truckers strike seems to make about that much sense.

The different groups all seem to have different goals, and no matter what the people in control propose, it is rejected by the strikers. People can strike for whatever they want and for whatever reason they have. I don't mind them trying to persuade other people to accept their cause, but when they try to destroy those who disagree with them, I would have to say that is a bit much. We call this a democratic country, and we say the majority should rule. Well, what you have is a vocal minority using threats, actual violence and any means of intimidation they can to get their way. And they say people in countries who do these things are what Ronald Reagan calls banana republics.

But, when you look back at things, the history of movements in this country has been a history of violence. When the unions were first formed, the employers used every weapon from police harassment with dogs and guns and clubs to break up the unions. So it came to where the workers began to use violence and outright murder to get their way, and they are called goons. What would you call the people who started all this?

And so now, when there is a strike such as the truckers those who would really like to carry on because they can't afford to be idle are beaten up, their property destroyed, and at least a couple of them have been killed. I can't see the truckers gaining much sympathy for their cause with the tactics they are using. And the payoff is that the damage is done under cover.

If they believed in their position so much, why do those who destroy property and try to assassinate those who don't go along with hide behind darkness or shoot from under cover? Why don't they come out and face the people whose property they destroy?

Saw in a news story the other day where a striker climbed upon a driver's truck and threatened to break out his windshield unless the man turned back. That turned me off the strikers, as violence on any picket line. Maybe I am dumb, but I think strikers could persuade more people to their viewpoint and gain more respect if they did away with those tactics.

We condemn Idi Amin and Nicaragua's Somoza for their murderous tactics and our strikers use the same thing here at home, and we call it defending our right to strike. Those dictators don't make any bones about what they do, and I don't have any respect for them, either, but they don't drive past a truck with a lone driver and fire back at him from a speeding car, or set fire to his rig while he is resting.

Dictatorship, union goon tactics, they both look alike when you hold them up.

If this doesn't make too much sense, please accept the fact that this has not been one of my better weeks.

Thoughts and Comments

By James B. Morris III

President Carter, as expected, announced last week that he is currently unwilling to lift the economic sanctions against Zimbabwe-Rhodesia and its new black-majority government. To lift the sanctions currently, he said, would do "serious damage" to international (and especially African) relations of the United States.

Carter conceded that Rhodesia had made some progress toward authentic majority rule by holding the elections which led to the installation of the Muzorewa government, but felt that this country should move more slowly on the issue, maintaining its ties with Black Africa (and access to the oil resources it has and this country so desperately needs) while pressing white Rhodesians for additional political, economic and social reforms. He acknowledged that the pro-Rhodesian sentiment in the Senate is strong, but vowed to do all he could to prevent Congress from lifting the sanctions on its own.

In Salisbury, Muzorewa blasted the Carter decision, telling reporters, "... it would be hard to think of a more blatant example of political expediency and of double standards and it is astonishing that it should come from a President of the United States who claims to be a champion of human rights..." Reaction to that decision has been mixed from within and without this country, but our energy situation, as regards the acquisition of sufficient supplies of crude oil, depends heavily upon it.

Neighboring Black African states, most of which have chosen not to recognize the new government, have generally gone on record in support of the Carter position. The Zambian government, which has actively promoted and supported Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe African Peoples Union, has declared, "Common sense has prevailed in this case and we hope it will continue in the American government."

A spokesman for Nkomo's ZAPU stated that Carter's decision would help in finding a solution to the problem of Zimbabwe-Rhodesia. President Seretse Khama of Botswana described the decision as a "... realistic assessment of the situation in Rhodesia..." Muzorewa's bitter rival and loser in the recent election, the Reverend Ndabaningi Sithole, also praised the Carter position, saying, "... (the) lifting of sanctions at this stage could easily see and intensification of (the) armed struggle in Rhodesia..." From within this country, reactions have been mixed. A spokesman for U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim endorsed the Carter stand as being "... in full conformity with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council ...", while Ariston Chambatti, director of research for the Patriotic Front, said he was disappointed that the President will continue to monitor the progress of the Salisbury regime.

Perhaps the most potent force determined to resist and overturn (if possible) the Carter decision to retain the sanctions is a newly formed bloc of the conservative members of the U.S. Senate. The President, in publicly announcing his decision, said, "... I recognize, to be perfectly frank with you, that I do not have a majority of support in the United States Senate" ... and recent events have borne this out. Under the terms of the Case-Javits amendment approved by the Senate last year, the President is obliged to lift the economic sanctions against Rhodesia imposed 13 years ago if he determines that the current Salisbury government has held free and fair elections and displayed a genuine willingness to negotiate an all-parties settlement to the civil insurrection with the leadership of the Patriotic Front.

Last month, the Senate, by a vote of 74 to 21, adopted a "sense of the Senate" resolution was clearly a setback for the Carter Administration, as it represented an attempt at Congressional intervention in the Presidential prerogative to determine whether or not the Rhodesian election and the resulting government is truly reflective of the majority's sentiments. But it also represented a setback to those Senators who wished to immediately lift the sanctions.

Jesse Helms, a North Carolina Republican, perhaps the most fervent supporter of Rhodesia in the Senate, had introduced an amendment that would have prevented Carter from enforcing those sanctions once the Muzorewa government took office. To block that proposal, Senate liberals who ordinarily would have supported the President's stand, voted for the non-binding resolution as a compromise.

Recently, however, after Carter announced his decision to continue the sanctions, Richard

Kalonji Saadiq

Speakin' Out

RETURN OF THE PANTHER

Say ya'll guess what, that Saadiq Character is runnin' for Mayor. Say what? Is he crazy? You mean that same greasy Niggah that be haulin trash? Boy that Niggah gotta lot a nerve, and guess what he's running as — a Black Panther.

What's happenin' ya'll? Guess what I started to do today. When I ran out of gas last nite I started to write an article called "The gas shortage . . . real or unreal", but by the time I worked off my frustration by singlehandedly pushing my GTO (I had called it the enforcer earlier but its real name is the Panther) from 16th and Carpenter to 14th and Laurel (approx. 6 blocks) I remembered I was supposed to write "Return of the Panther".

I'm tellin ya I'm some candidate for Mayor — I can't even afford gas. But then this is the main reason I'm runnin'. I love to live the life I talk about. No I ain't got no money but I got plenty of heart and a little bit of sense. Plus my poverty gives me a slight edge in that I can talk about the plight of the poor without sounding like a bleeding heart liberal.

How serious am I? Serious as a heart attack. I goin for every vote I can get but I'm gonna be me. The last time I ran for office I did pretty good but I did a lot of role playing and too much thinking and not enough feeling. I stopped dancin', singin', and forgot to enjoy myself every now and then.

Why am I running for mayor and why did I announce that I was reorganizing the Black Panther Party? I'm running for mayor for a number of reasons. No. 1 I want to determine some of the issues to be raised. No. 2. I want to make it clear to every voter where each candidate stands. No. 3. I want to establish myself as a legitimate political voice in Des Moines.

But why as a Black Panther? Why? First of all the people have got to know what I stand for. My experience as a Black Panther has been used as an excuse by many people to not support me. This is because they do not understand what I was about in the late sixties — much less the politics of the Black Panther Party. The people must know that I'm not a man of hate and the ideology of the Black Panther Party was not one of hate.

They've got to know that the Black Panther Party shaped my thinking for life. They've got to know that I'm proud of my experience as a Black Panther. They've got to know that I fight out of love and not hate, and finally they've got to know that I'm still a panther. In other words — If I don't win in '79" because people don't understand what happen in '69" I won't win in '89" for the same reason.

I'm settin' about to clarify a point in history. I've told you before, should the good Lord let me make it to middle age that I would bug if I saw the Panthers portrayed as the bad guys while portraying the corrupt F.B.I. as heroes.

We never stood for hatred especially racial hatred. We viewed ourselves as the vanguard of the new American revolution, the voice for all oppressed peoples — Blacks, poor whites, latins, asiatics etc. The chapter in Chicago under Fred Hampton had formed a rainbow coalition comprised of Black Panthers representing Black people, the Brown Berets representing latinos, the Asian Red Guard representing Asians and the Southern Patriots representing oppressed whites. Now how much difference is there between the rainbow coalition and the New Majority that I've been advocating?

There are major differences between then and

A Black Look At Politics

William S. Morris

As you all know, Black unemployment has been reaching incredibly high levels in this country, especially since the early 1970's. While white jobless rates have declined to normal levels of around 4.3 percent, the 1973-74 recession still affects this nation's Black population, to the tune of forty to sixty percent, in large inner-city areas.

True, Black unemployment figures have always been higher than those of whites, even in the best of economic times, but the difference really widens when we examine two distinct groups: white and Black males. White males have traditionally enjoyed all the benefits this society have had to offer, then when the time comes to share a small portion of them, "reverse discrimination" is claimed.

Like or not, many (most?) whites in the U.S. do not like to see Blacks performing well in roles or jobs formerly held only by whites. Thus, public education, the job market, etc. are all designed to eliminate "undesirable" groups (Blacks, Hispanics, and Native Americans) from desirable occupations. Unfortunately, a capitalist system such as ours cannot work without "chiefs" and "Indians" — in other words, most minorities are destined to be the "last hired and first fired".

The massive expansion of white collar jobs in the private and public (government) sectors of the economy has benefitted a number of Blacks, but now white women are cornering an ever-larger share of the shrinking employment "pie".

As inflation soars, families find it a necessity to have both spouses working outside the home, at a time when unemployment statistics for Black males are staggering, especially for teenagers.

Television and radio advertisements keep referring to Iowa as "the" place to live in the Midwest — maybe because there are so few Blacks! More seriously though, joblessness for minority youth is quite high — but this is never admitted in official statements.

I have seen and talked to more brothers playing basketball at local courts who can't find jobs, than I've seen working in banks, offices, and on road-crews.

Why, you ask? Because white-owned businesses don't want to hire Blacks, and conservative political leaders in Iowa do nothing about the situation, nor do many Black professional and social organizations. Granted, there are so few Blacks in this state that political clout and influence are extremely limited, but those Blacks in leadership and managerial positions, or those who are economically well off, seem to "turn the other cheek," when it comes to Black unemployment.

Without the efforts of my grandparents, my father, and so many others on the Iowa Civil Rights scene since the 1940's and 50's and 60's, most of these people probably wouldn't have the jobs they have today.

Perhaps the main factor in Black unemployment is the nation-wide decline in Black political power, related to the dwindling significance of the vote (at the National level). Without political muscle, white officials can afford to ignore the needs of Blacks and the poor.

Most people these days label inflation and energy as the most urgent problems confronting America, and are likely to vote on the basis of these issues. The problem is, you simply can't reduce inflation without causing a rise in unemployment, for the most part.

And who gets hurt most by rising unemployment, or even a recession? It ain't the white man, I'll tell you.

Recently, government economists admitted the likelihood of another recession, which would dwarf the one of '73-'74. OPEC oil price increases will doubtless have a heavy impact on this happening, just as the Arab oil embargo in 1973. Blacks haven't even recovered fully from the last recession, and now, we're faced with another one.

With the President talking about cutting back on social aid programs and the number of public service jobs, Black Americans may be faced with a harsh economic picture, reminiscent of the 1930's.

The State of Iowa is not one of your more liberal-minded states, nor is the political leadership likely to be receptive to the needs of a small, fractured Black community. Similarly, the business community need only hire a handful of "token" Black employees for public relations and informal "quota" purposes.

Often, minority employees are "imported" from out-of-state branches, to give an impression (usually false) of an Affirmative Action program. Without access to the job market, and increasing social segregation by race, many Iowa-born Blacks leave for the East and West coasts, especially those with any sort of marketable job skills.

Statistical projections show the Iowa population declining regularly, since 1960. Black exodus has been even more dramatic, and some experts have predicted that, if trends continue, by the year 2000, there will only be about one thousand Blacks in the entire state.

The employment picture looks bleak for Black youths in Iowa, but if we continue to desert the area, the situation will worsen. But, if you can't find work, why remain?

These are all volatile questions, which require much broader discussion than I can give here. I recommend that the readers attend upcoming conferences dealing with Black employment, and keep abreast of the job situation for Blacks in Iowa. Black America needs "all shoulders to the wheel" in these troubled times.

For next week, I will analyze Republican and Democratic Party performance in Iowa, as regards Blacks. I may enrage a few people, but we must be able to gauge the significance of aligning with one party or the other "en masse," or going with neither, acting as a "swing group," in close elections.

Opinion

Edna Griffin

I invite you to share my joy in three small events in spite of worry about the price of gas and the threat of empty shelves in the grocery stores.

The SALT II editorial on the front page of the OPINION section of the Sunday Register. Arguments for and against SALT II are presented with a stand taken in favor. The editorial is worth hunting up the Sunday paper to read what Richard Harwood has to say. I limit myself to quoting what he has to say about the coming opposition in the Senate.

"The SALT debate in the Senate is likely to go on for months. It will be filled with jargon of the nuclear age — megatons, throw weights, CEPs, EMTs and all the acronyms we have invented ... Much of this will have nothing to do with the terms of the treaty. It will deal with the question of Soviet intentions, America's place in the world and the diplomatic uses of nuclear might".

We are already hearing the SALT filibuster. I have written the President and my two senators urging passage of SALT II without amendments. Tomorrow I'll commend Richard Harwood for his editorial.

In the Tuesday, June 26, D.M. Register, Daniel Schorr has a wonderful editorial about Thurgood Marshall. Here is a quote from Justice Marshall. "Each day, I thank the Lord for the wisdom of the Founding Fathers in giving us judges life-long tenure."

If you read my column about Justice Marshall a few weeks ago, you'll know he is making waves in the U.S. Supreme Court and he doesn't have to worry about being fired. He will be there the rest of his life. Did you know that Justice Marshall did not attend the White House celebration of the 15th anniversary of the Brown vs Topeka, Kans. as board of education desegregation decision?

This is why he didn't show up. "It was not health that kept him away, but dissatisfaction with the pace of civil rights progress — the Supreme Court's decision in the Bakke "reverse discrimination" case. "I didn't see anything to celebrate", he (Marshall) said. Say Amen!

Daniel Schorr writes, He (Marshall) is aware that his critics watch the state of his health with more than usual interest, and he believes that there are "certain forces interested in spreading the impression of failing faculties as a way of exerting pressure for his retirement.

There are one or two other interesting items in the column. They are worth paying fifty cents for the June 26, Des Moines Register.

The Organization of American States provided a pleasant surprise last week. They met to consider the civil war in Nicaragua. A White House proposal to send a peacekeeping force to Nicaragua was greeted with icy silence, and a unanimous vote against it.

According to TV news the Sandinistas have refused offers of help to restore order. Our government no longer dares to send the marines without permission. Both South and Central America dare tell it like it is. That's progress as we move toward the 21st century.

I have been puzzled about the plight of the "boat people". I finally came across an explanation which goes beyond the assumption that we are the good guys and the Viet Nameese and Southeast Asians are barbarians. Briefly, this is, it seems to me, a rational explanation. As early as May of this year, a representative of Viet Nam met with the UN High Commissioner on Refugees and pledged utmost cooperation toward helping solve the refugee problem: to facilitate the exit of those who wish to leave Viet Nam and obtain safe passage to other countries.

Exit operations will be carried out at regular intervals on appropriate means of transport. The Vietnamese government has urged the international community to "take a constructive and cooperative attitude" toward the problem and to carry out the resettlement of refugees in a safe, orderly and humanitarian way.

This does not sound barbarous to me, especially since it is under the auspices of the United Nations. I'm sure everyone will feel relieved to know that people will not be left to drown.

now. There will be no parading around with guns. There will be no profanity to turn off the little ol' ladies and church folk. But here's the major difference. In 1969 the police forces across this nation and the Nixon regime represented the greatest physical threat to Black people, now Black people represent the greatest physical threat to Black people.

So, therefore, No. 1 of the Black Panther Party's revised platform is "We want an end to Black on Black crime and violence. This emphasizes our duty to ourselves. If we are going to demand from others at least let us make stringent demands of ourselves. This goes along with the concept of emphasizing our duties as well as our rights.

Response to my campaign as well as my intentions to re-organize the Black Panther party are very encouraging. This should be a race Des Moines will not soon forget. I plan to do much better this time. I betcha I ain't gonna finish last. If the police don't pop me upside my head (why should they after all my antagonism is greatly reduced towards them and if they stay out of my way some Niggah will do it for em.) and make me bug and the courts don't lock me up. I'm gonna show ya'll what I can do. Make sure you attend the debates in the fall. I did excel at the debates last time.

Well, that's it for this week. Wish me luck (good or bad depending upon how you feel about me). By the way if you would like to meet your candidate call me (244-7296) before 9:00 a.m. and set up a dinner meeting. I'm so poor I could use a meal anyway.

Let me close with a little prayer. Lord, grant me strength to run the best race I can. Lord, stay the hand of those that oppose me, at least until the race has been run (won?), and let my message ring throughout this city. The message is peace, love, progress, racial harmony, and social justice.

Weber Decision Supports Affirmative Action

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled Wednesday in the Weber case that employers may give minority workers special treatment in hiring, training and promotion. The decision allows employers with no proven history of racial bias to offer the special preferences and those employers with a proven history of discrimination can be required to offer them.

The court said the Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Co. did not discriminate illegally against Brian Weber, a white Kaiser employee in Louisiana, by adopting a plan "to eliminate traditional patterns of racial segregation."

The on-the-job training program, begun by Kaiser in conjunction with the United Steelworkers Union was aimed at landing more blacks in higher-paying positions.

The court's decision did not discuss sexual discrimination. But because it was based on a federal law that bans sexual bias as well as racial bias in employment, the ruling also represents a big victory for the women's rights movement.

Voting in favor of the affirmative action programs for minorities were Justices William J. Brennan Jr., Potter Stewart, Byron R. White, Thurgood Marshall and Harry A. Blackmun. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justice William H. Rehnquist dissented. Justices John Paul Stevens and Lewis F. Powell Jr. did not participate in the case.

Stevens disqualified himself early on, but refused to say why. It has been learned, however, that he did so because he had represented Kaiser Aluminum in his days as a Chicago lawyer. Powell was recovering from surgery when the court heard arguments in Weber's case last March 26.

Weber, a 32-year-old lab worker at Kaiser's Gramercy, La., plant, sued in 1974 after being excluded from a craft training program.

The program accepted black and white employees on a one-for-one basis. For every black chosen, a white was chosen.

Had trainees been selected solely on a seniority basis, no blacks would have been included in the Gramercy program.

In 1974, 39 percent of the local workforce was black, and 15 percent of Kaiser's Gramercy plant workers were black. But less than 2 percent of the plant's craft workers — 5 of 273 — were black.

Kaiser did not blame itself for the obvious racial disparity in skilled jobs. It attributed the disparity to a lack of training opportunities for blacks in the building trades industry.

Weber's case was seen by civil rights leaders as potentially far more important than last June's "Bakke" decision, in which the court upheld the idea that race may be taken into the account in a university's admissions decisions.

In last June's decision, however, the court ruled that Allan Bakke, who is white, had been illegally excluded from a California medical school. Bakke was subsequently admitted.

The justices in the Bakke case, by a 5-4 vote, struck down an admissions policy that made race the only factor in considering applications for a certain number of class openings.

The Bakke ruling was based on a section of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, known as Title 6, which was not addressed in the Weber case. Title 6 bans racial discrimination by institutions receiving federal funds.

If the voluntary use of affirmative action had been wiped out, civil rights leaders said, all government efforts to help minorities and women improve their status in private industry could be affected.

Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the ruling "vindicates my faith." He added, "Had we lost this case, the cause of affirmative action would have been set back ten years."

George Meany, the president of the AFL-CIO, called the court decision "a victory for all who believe in racial justice and who are committed to private voluntary action to end discrimination."

Thomas Jones Jr., president of the Iowa

Affirmative Action Association, called the Weber decision "a tremendous victory for Iowa. There seems to be an eroding of commitment to affirmative action here, based on lack of significant leadership.

The Supreme Court has stepped in on this case and provided the necessary leadership for employers, both public and private."

Small Businesses Create Most Jobs

After months of inflation and recession, many of the nation's small business entrepreneurs are fighting for survival and most are succeeding!

Of the 10.7 million businesses in the U.S. today, 10.4 million or 96.7 percent are considered "small" by the U.S. Small Business Administration's small business size standards for loan applicants. With rising costs, tight money, depressed markets and uncertain supply sources, the number of small businesses in the U.S. has increased annually in most of the past 30 years. The average annual number of new businesses started in the past 10 years, has been approximately 250,000.

Small business now accounts for 43 percent of the Gross National Product and 48 percent of the Gross Business Product.

Small business directly or indirectly provides the livelihood for more than 100 million Americans; however, 80 percent of the U.S. businesses employ less than 10 people.

The small business sector of the economy creates more jobs than any other. Between 1969 and 1976, 14 million Americans joined the civilian labor force, and in that same period, 9 million jobs were created. During that time span, there was no increase in employment among the U.S.'s thousand largest corporations, which had approximately 16 million individuals in the new jobs, 3 million went to work for state governments, but the remaining 6 million went to work for small businesses.

Small business finds it harder to cope with economic adversity than larger, more financially stable competitors. Dun & Bradstreet report that 95 percent of all business failures are a direct result of poor management. Unfortunately, 55 percent of the businesses in the U.S. fail (go bankrupt or are discontinued) in the first five year of operation.

The number of minority-owned small business firms continues to increase each year.

Folks and Strokes

Edna Griffin

I spent the first two weeks in June in North Carolina visiting our son who had been there four months repairing and completing a recently deceased uncle's house — an oak structure that had withstood many years of neglect. I must say my son and his friend, Dean Baker, did a magnificent job. I regret not having a "before and after" photograph to share.

Stanley's many talents are a source of amazement to his parents. He is an excellent photographer. Many of you may remember his skill with leather during the '60s. I have watched him draft patterns for women's skirts and vests that once were so popular. While still in high school he negotiated a contract to take pictures of all Little League baseball teams and earned about $300.

While in North Carolina, it was interesting to watch the completion of numerous details before Stanley rented the house to a young couple. The house was rented before the ad appeared in the paper because Stanley had put a For Rent sign in the yard and received seven inquiries. A reassuring climax to four months of hard work.

My husband and I had some concern for Stanley's first extended time in the South. What do you say to a blunt, to-the-point young man who was born and raised in Iowa? We explained that life moves at a slower tempo and with a certain regard for good manners. When we saw that Don't-you-trust-me look in his eyes, we knew we had really 'goofed'.

We received progress reports from time to time over the phone. My visit gave me an opportunity to see how well Stan was getting along in his new world. I had forgotten a lesson learned when our son was about seven. His manners away from home were above reproach as are most children's. Residents of the neighborhood were impressed with how hard the young men worked.

Stanley acknowledged that his acceptance was due, in part, to being Uncle Willie's nephew. Uncle Willie, a life-long resident was well-known in the city. It was necessary to interpret two experiences with older generation white businessmen.

My son was "fit to be tied" when the inspector of electric wiring failed to show up as promised. The same situation existed with the appraiser. I met both of these men and understood what was happening. It was my impression that my son had been put on 'hold' because he came through as very much in charge and expecting immediate action.

Stan is still waiting to hear from the appraiser. Both men were friendly and gave Stan some important pointers. A second impression was older people whether black or white sometimes resent what they feel is arrogance in the young.

A third impression gained as I accompanied my son around the city was whites of Stan's generation were less formal and at ease. I am thinking of the city planner, a secretary with a wonderful sense of humor, and people in the bank. I think Stanley's four months of experience in the South is the equivalent of a graduate course in human relations, business administration and just plain hard work. He did very well.

I was glad to have a second look at the South which is still in the process of defining itself. It was brought to my attention that skilled Black electricians and plumbers cannot get contracts on their own and are forced to work for five dollars an hour for white contractors earning eighteen dollars.

We did not learn whether this is due to exclusion from a union. The fact is the Blacks do the work. This is an ugly aspect of economic power. It is hard to relate the case of the Wilmington 10 to the easy-going friendly atmosphere one feels in Elizabeth City, N.C.

The scenery is very much like Iowa, at least, in the area of Albermarle Sound. There is a bird sanctuary somewhere in the general area. My only objection is the hour when all of them rejoice at being alive before dawn. Unable to sleep, I counted at least twelve different languages!

The Iowa Bystander will not return pictures through the mail. Contributors are encouraged to pick up the pictures at the Bystander office as soon after publication as possible.

Affirmative action is the practical application of constitutional rights.

This column is designed to address itself to pertinent issues that affect and threaten the natural development of human life. Many of the issues taken are highly controversial and oftentimes stir the soul with a wide range of emotions. To bring God into our lives without apology — without compromise and the other things that come as a direct result of worldly peer pressure.

We live in a society that is given to fad and fashion. It is fashionable not to acknowledge God in

ST. PAUL A.M.E. CHURCH

The Morning Worship was uplifted last Sunday

as preparation for worship was sung by Mrs. Carolyn Ayers. Her solo interpretations reached all those present. The service was further enhanced by the Richard Allen Chorus singing, "I'm Pressing On" — Charles Simmons, soloist and "Shine On Me", a special request.

Mrs. Shirley Harper touched every heart with "How Great Thou Art". Such music preaches the sermon — if we only listen. Reverend Grady spoke appropriately on Father's Day.

A fine Father - Son fellowship was enjoyed by those present... but it took the ladies to prepare the good food. It was agreed to have this fellowship as an annual affair. Recipient of the award for the most admired young man in St. Paul was Cory Thompson, son of Mrs. Charmaine Burrell.

Attorney Alfredo Parrish is featured speaker on Men's Day next Sunday, June 24, at the morning service. Mr. Richard Perry, Chairman of the day, asks all captains to report next Sunday.

Those persons who have attended the Bible Study classes have enjoyed the Misson of the church studied through Corinthians. The new subject concerning salvation of the Gentiles found in 3rd Chapter of Ephesians. Marion Williams, Leader.

Plan NOW to send your youngster to Bible school the last week of July. We will need volunteers for teaching, crafts, driving the van, clean up, and serving snacks. We welcome anyone and everyone to help us. The reward is very inspiring when we see faces of youngsters in God's church. We especially welcome TEENAGERS.

In celebration of the current "International Year of the Child" plans are being made for a special Youth Service in July in accordance with this theme. Mrs. Lynda Walker - Webster, layman program chairperson is coordinating this service.

the fact that He exists. But how many of us are conscious of the ever presence of God? How many of our actions are done with God in mind, and how many of our actions are done out of a desire to please God and not ourselves. The Holy Qur'an (The Muslim Bible) teaches us to attend to the needs of our soul. We should be more concerned with tending to the needs of our souls than any other need.

When we say soul we mean the spirit or the heart. One may not be rich or endowed with great intellectual qualities — But if the heart is right God will guide you to intellect and material. Purity of heart means pure or right intentions and actions are governed and judged by intent. As human beings all of our actions spring out of motives (intent). If our actions are wrong for the most part it is because our motive or intention is wrong. This why purity of heart is needed to aid us in our actions. The Bible says, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

Let's not allow satan to fool us — the heart is used as a symbol of courage, conviction, human concern and compassion. Satan represents the heart to us as a symbol of passion — exaggerated passion. You see God wants us to have a heart full of faith — courage — and compassion while satan wants us to have a heart full of passion — which is lust.

Lust is a destructive force in the society and in the world we live in we can find this the predominate motive in male and female relationships. Lust is the primary factor in the business world — the society is cheated, lied to and coerced because of the greediness of a few. Lust is an anti-social urge which tends to produce selfishness, egotism and anarchy. It lacks stability and sense of responsibility and urges the human being to temporary pleasure only. What marriage or relationship can become and remain stable when founded on lust? What government can remain strong when its leaders and people are given to lust?

Next week if it pleases God, we will discuss this topic further along with the subject of sex — abortion and family.

May God bless you and all of us to come together and work for the common good of the society.

As-Salaam-Alaikum
(Peace be unto you)
Shahid A. Muhammad

LOOK ON SPORTS

I guess the news of the week would have been the finally announced retirement of heavyweight champ Muhammad Ali. The man said he is thirty seven years and too old for a title defense.

Actually, the hard part is getting ready for the defense. If an athlete will do the things he knows he has to do in order to get ready for a contest, he can go on for a longer while than people think. But getting ready is so hard because you know you don't really want to go through the punishment of getting down to weight, and denying yourself the things you like as part of the good life. You have probably all the money you will need, so why torture yourself?

Ali is billed as the only man to regain the heavyweight title three times. That would also make him the only man who lost the thing three times, although it was taken from him once in his fight with the draft board before his case ever came up for a hearing, so he was neither guilty or innocent, but a man without a title just the same.

As I talked to people about the first Frazier fight, the feeling against Ali was tremendous. People who didn't know a boxing glove from a beef roast were pulling for the man to lose. I often thought the only way Ali could have won that first battle was by a kayo. Folks were sorry to see him beat George Foreman, and were not exactly in his corner in the second fight with Joe Frazier.

Then we have Leon Spinks who caught lightning in a jug. He had as much business beating Ali as I would have had. He took the wise course when he agreed to fight the former champ again because that was where the dough was. A fight with anybody else would not have drawn peanuts, and Spinks who was apt to lose his first title defense no matter who he fought.

So we could have had maybe Ken Norton, Ernie Shaver or Jimmy Young as champ now. But we have Larry Holmes and the Greatest.

I don't like to get in this thing, but, come Sunday, I think, I will be entered into the Iowa Tennis Hall of Fame, something I consider a great honor. I have never done anything with that in mind, but each time the presentation has been held and the fellows have been introduced, I would think that I would like to get that some day, although I considered my chances not too hot.

The news that I had made it was a complete surprise to me, but I am happy and grateful. Included in the group will be Ben Beckerman, whom I thought should have made it years ago and John Calton, president of the Iowa Tennis Association.

Thoughts & Comments

Schweicker, Republican Senator from Pennsylvania, called it "... a slap in the face of the U.S. Senate..." Various Senators have offered compromise proposals to the Administration, of all of which would have left the ultimate decision on the lifting of sanctions to Congress, but the President has showed himself adamant to force this issue.

The Senate then, by a vote of 52 to 41, defeated an amendment offered by Senator Jacob Javits (Dem., NY) to the 40 billion dollar military authorization bill which would have allowed the President to maintain the sanctions until at least December 1, 1979 and afterwards if he certified to Congress that to continue them would be in the national interest.

An earlier amendment to the same bill also offered by Javits would have given Carter another six months to consider the issue of sanction but would have allowed Congress to overturn his decision at the end of that period, but it too was rejected. This most recent vote left an amendment authorized by Senator Harry Bird (Ind., Va.) to that military authorization bill intact which mandates the President to lift the sanctions if he chooses sign the bill.

Carter has, in resisting that measure, decided that it is unlikely that the opponents of his policies could attract the 67 votes (2/3) needed to override a Presidential veto of that measure.

Congress, however, is unlikely to push the issue that far. The House of Representatives has been much more supportive of the Carter position, and it will soon vote on a bill to allow the sanctions to continue until he has determined that true majority rule has been achieved. Even if that measure is defeated (and the chances are that it will pass), the House Armed Services Committee has proposed a military authorization bill which makes no mentions of sanctions.

Chances are that a House-Senate conference committee called to reconcile the two versions of the bill would drop the Senate's mandatory amendment rather than to force the President to veto the measure which probably couldn't be overridden, considering the fact that 41 Senators which voted for the Javits amendment is 7 more than needed to sustain such a veto. Were that Byrd proposal to be retained in the bill sent to the President, his veto would require Congress to pass that weapons bill a second time.

Rights On Trial

(A report by the Des Moines Human Rights Commission)

Sometimes in civil rights cases law, the civil rights agency will lose a case but gain a point of law that helps others.

This happened in the case of Green vs. McDonnell Douglas Corporation.

Percy Green had worked for McDonnell Douglas from 1956 until he was part of a general layoff in August of 1964.

Mr. Green protested his discharge as being racially motivated and filed a number of complaints. In addition, he participated in a number of protests which included blocking a highway access leading to the McDonnell Douglas plant, picketing the home of the chairman of the board, and using chains to lock employees inside the plant.

In July of 1965, the company advertised for qualified electrical mechanics. Mr. Green applied and was turned down. After Mr. Green was turned down the company continued to seek applicants. McDonnell never disputed Mr. Green's ability to do the work.

Mr. Green charged that he was not hired because of his race and his involvement with civil rights. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ruled in his favor regarding his civil rights activity but did not deal with the issue of denial of employment because of race.

The EEOC tried to conciliate but could not and proceeded to court in 1968. The case was tried and appealed through the next eight years, ending in the U.S. District Court of Appeals.

At that final level the court ruled in favor of McDonnell Douglas on the grounds that some of the civil rights activities had been illegal and therefore not protected under the 1964 Civil Rights Act, and that "there was no showing that Caucasian employees who had participated in illegal demonstrations had ever been treated differently than Negro workers who had engaged in such activities."

The case was lost so far as Mr. Green was concerned. He was not rehired or awarded any damages. McDonnell Douglas' right to refuse to hire him was upheld.

Yet this case is referred to as a landmark civil rights case and is much quoted and used by civil rights agencies and civil rights lawyers in defending minorities and women who feel that they were not hired because of their race or sex.

The reason that the case is important and helpful in civil rights law is that Circuit Judges, Bright and Lay made a decision on what proof is necessary for a person to have who believes he or she has not been employed because of illegal discrimination.

The two judges said that if a person can establish that he or she belonged to a protected class (minority or female), was qualified for the job, applied for the job, was not hired, and the company continued to seek other applicants, that person then has what the courts call a Prima Facie case of discrimination (that is, a "case on the face of it.") That person then doesn't have to prove that illegal discrimination occurred. The company must then prove that illegal discrimination didn't occur.

Before Green vs. McDonnell Douglas, a person had to produce enough evidence to convince the courts of illegal discrimination. Now, it is the company that must do the proving once the person meets the requirements of a prima facie case given above. Because of this it became easier for those who think they were victims of illegal discrimination to obtain the job they applied for, or know the reason why.
