NAACP's Women's Task Force On Africa Critical Of Kissinger Zimbabwe Views

Henry Kissinger took time off from writing his $5,000,000 memoirs to be interviewed by the Washington Post, which published it on July 3 as a full page op-ed piece — "Henry Kissinger on the U.S. and Rhodesia."

As if it may have gone unnoticed, the Post also featured a front-page news article with the caption: "U.S. Seen Favoring Radicals Against Moderates — Kissinger Attacks Rhodesia Policy."

To anyone who remembers Kissinger's stance on Southern Africa during the Nixon-Ford years, his attacks on Carter's policy should be no revelation.

It was through Kissinger's direction, 10 years ago, that a secret National Security Study Memorandum 39 documented options to protect the interests of the U.S. and white minority governments in Southern Africa.

It was also Kissinger who advised the covert use of U.S. military supplies in Angola (for the South Africa supported UNITA-FNLA faction) in 1975.

It was likewise Kissinger, who, in an effort to offset Soviet-Cuban penetration in Southern Africa and to ensure U.S. credibility, made his first trip to the continent in April 1976 and, later that year, announced his "plan for majority rule" in Zimbabwe.

The "plan" which he negotiated with South Africa's John Vorster and Rhodesia's Ian Smith, did not include discussions with black nationalist leaders Robert Mugabe, Joshua Nkomo, Ndabaningi

Sithole, or Abel Muzorewa, who is the new Prime Minister. "We never thought we could co-opt the ideological radicals," Kissinger said in his Washington Post interview. "Our goal was to ignore them."

He is now vexed that the Carter Administration is not ignoring them. In his words, "Cyrus Vance and his associates — certainly Andy Young — believe that the wave of the future is represented by the radical elements in Rhodesia and Africa."

He is now accusing Carter of a kind of surrender to "radicals" over "moderates" because Carter said the following on June 7 when he refused to lift trade sanctions against the new government in Zimbabwe-Rhodesia:

The actual voting in the April elections appears to have been administered in a reasonably fair way under the circumstances. But the elections were held under a constitution that was drafted by and then submitted only to the white minority, only 60 percent of whom themselves supported the new constitution.

Kissinger's major interest is not in the sanctions, the election or the constitution; it is in whether the Soviet Union and Cuba may succeed in doing what they did in Angola. His posture on Africa should be suspect anyway, since none of his books, articles or speeches, before he became National Security Council advisor and Secretary of State ever mentioned African affairs.

Moreover, those of us who watch American press coverage of African affairs observed that Kissinger's attacks on Carter's policy bear close resemblance to recent editorials on Zimbabwe in the Washington Post.

"The President's Rhodesia Blunder" (June 8) and "A Scalpel for Rhodesia" (June 22) are but two cases in point. It is not without irony that they both were anonymously written by Kissinger's interviewer, Stephen S. Rosenfeld.

"Europeans' as whites are commonly called by 'Africans' are crucial," Rosenfeld wrote in one of his articles in 1977. "They provide vital skills and contacts. Like live canaries in a coal mine, their presence signals that the political air is safe to breathe."

"Insufficient, inaccurate, unconcerned, unenlightened and insensitive coverage of African affairs" were the charges we heard most often about the American media during our fact-finding mission to Africa for the NAACP Task Force on Africa in 1977. The Washington Post, unfortunately does little to contradict that press image with editorials such as those we have described.
