Dear Dr. McAtee:

I am sending for your criticism the manuscript of a paper "Wild Life Management; An Integration of Ends in Land Use."

The first few pages of this paper you have already seen but the rest is entirely new. I have prepared this as the concluding chapter of my thesis and incidentally for publication, perhaps in American Game. I had at first considered it for Outdoor America, but I am not so sure of its suitability for this magazine. I would like your ideas on this point.

You will doubtless note that my discussion of the sportsman's place in the out-of-doors savors somewhat of your recent paper, "A Little Essay on Vermin." Just what influence your paper had on mine, I don't know. I had already planned--though not written--this particular one before I read yours, but it is entirely probable that some of your material had an indirect effect in shaping my own discussion.

If you have extra reprints of your Bird Lore paper to spare, I could distribute several in places where it might do some good.

Yours sincerely,

Paul L. Errington
