NOTES ON Thayer's Gulls

24 Nov 1989, Credit Is.

A juvenile found by Pete Petersen and Ken Lowder when flying was sitting on the ice at about 50 yards when I saw it. Compared to the many juvenile Herring Gulls, it was a more uniform light brown--head, body, and wings all same shade. There was a smudge behind the eye. The wing coverts had whiter centers with delicate light tan edging. The primaries were brown rather than black. I saw a uniform upper wing surface when bird raised wing, but I did not see under wing. Pete and Ken did. I made no attempt to judge size and head shape, other than to note general similarity to Herrings. I noted barring on the tail and nearby flanks as the bird preened. I was most impressed by the cleanness and uniformity of the bird compared to Herrings.

25 Nov 1989, Lock 19, Keokuk, 2 juveniles.

Bob Cecil found these birds the day before. As we pulled up to dock area, one was flying between us and a tug boat that was anchored near shore. It was too close for binoculars. The uniform upper wing surface and silver-white translucent flight feathers on underwing surface were easily seen. We followed the bird to the lock as a barge was coming out of the lock and the gulls were feeding behind it. There were two Thayer's and I took photos at close range. The tails were brown at the distal half and lighter at the base.
