Iowa Birdline (319)338-9881 for 1/20/92

The bitter cold of the past week had several effects, among which it sent most of the lingering waterfowl and gulls south and out of the state, and it kept birders out of the field, as we have not received much new information.

In the east, at the Quad Cities on the 17th, there were still several hundred gulls around Mississippi River Lock & Dam #15 in downtown Davenport, including adult LESSER BLACK-BACKED, adult GLAUCOUS, and adult THAYER'S GULLS, plus a first year ICELAND GULL. However, a report from the 18th indicated that no gulls remained in the area. ON THE 19TH THERE WERE STILL GULLS AT THAT LOCATION, BUT ONLY THE FIRST YEAR ICELAND WAS FOUND.

In the south-central, the PINE WARBLER at Gladys Black's feeder in Pleasantville since December 19th, may have perished in the cold, as it was last seen on the 14th, just prior to the passage of the week's first cold front. Near Red Rock Reservoir, an adult RED SHOULDERED HAWK was seen again on the 16th, just south of the intersection of Marion County road G-40 and hiway #14.

In the central, a NORTHERN SAW WHET OWL was located in the Lost Lake area at Ledges State Park on the 19th, and the Armstrongs have had a NORTHERN SHRIKE picking off GOLDFINCHES at their feeder in Madison County, south of Booneville.

In the northeast, Elaine Nekola reports a PILEATED WOODPECKER at her home along the Bluffton blacktop three and a half miles northwest of Decorah on the 14th.

A reminder that the 1992 feeder survey is this week, January 23-26. If you need a form, or have questions, call Rick Hollis at (319)338-4834. Jim Fuller (319)338-3561
