When man is no more than a babe,
He is the center of his universe.

A close-up photograph of a field of red tulips. The flowers are in various stages of bloom, with some showing their characteristic six-petaled shape. The green leaves are long and pointed, creating a dense, textured background for the vibrant red petals. The lighting is bright, highlighting the texture of the petals and the sharp edges of the leaves.

As he grows, his universe expands,
And man becomes aware of the special things in life.

DRINKWATER

Confronted by his adolescence, His awareness of distant stars is heightened.

A dark, atmospheric photograph. In the upper right corner, a bright, glowing light source, possibly a star or a lamp, illuminates the scene. In the lower left, the silhouette of a person's head and shoulders is visible, looking towards the light. The background is a deep, dark blue or black, with a few faint, distant stars or lights scattered across it. The overall mood is contemplative and serene.

Adulthood brings the fostering of aspirations
For learning, for fulfillment, and for peace of mind.

We are now but persons, ignorant in darkness,
But through our experiences at Iowa State ...

Through an opening of our eyes,
And through a constant striving for enlightenment,
We shall become aware.

The Dawning of Awareness

Eyes cater the exceptional luxury of vision to the mind. Through vision, the spectacular sights of life are noticed, and have the potential for being consciously recognized, if and only if the observer is willing to perceive these sights with an additional dose of curiosity. Additional curiosity produces an illuminating effect. Scenes in the external world with no particular traits suddenly become picturesque, and those views with some previous splendor mature into unique and untouchable treasures.

By leaving the darkness of apathy behind and beginning to allow the light of conscious recognition to pierce the mind, through a "Dawning of Awareness," the special things in life can be appreciated.

"Dawning of Awareness" includes

beginning to take a look, a very good look, at oneself. Being aware of one's own impulses, desires, fears, and prejudices can bring one to better value life in general. In addition, through seeing all of the colors of one's own personality picture, potential and worth can be found in others, especially in those very close to oneself.

The 1981 BOMB staff began the year as a group of individuals, each aware of his or her own private sphere, but not of anyone else's. However, through the unifying effort of one common project (the assemblance of this book), through many fun experiences, shared talks and problems, disasters and accomplishments, the staff grew to be watchful of others' worlds, as well as his or her own. Furthermore, the 1981 BOMB staff collectively compiled a yearbook which illustrates some of the unique and special features of Iowa State University and its environment, the magnificent events of both, and most importantly, the treasures of people with whom we have become associated.

Hopefully, through examination of this 1981 BOMB, Iowa State University and its surrounding community may be injected with an additional dose of curiosity . . . may re-open their eyes . . . and may truly experience a "Dawning of Awareness" that will tie all people of all races, from all countries, and in all economic and social levels together with a huge rainbow of colors extending from person to person, all over the world.

Parade celebrates storied

Events for this year's celebration include canoe races, open house displays, and campus tours.

Veishea's highlight was the parade, "Short Stories and Tall Tales." Winners in the large float division were Tau Kappa Epsilon/Chi Omega with their entry "The Jungle Book."

Other winners included Sigma Phi Epsilon/Alpha Gamma Delta with "Do-a-little Talking," medium division and Sigma Alpha Epsilon/Alpha Delta Phi with "The Magic, the Mystery, the Marvels of Middle Earth," small division.

Prizes were awarded to the fastest pie-eaters at the 11th annual Fairchild pie-eating contest on April 28, 1980.

Those who weren't quick still had a chance, for the Ames merchant donated prizes by having the best costume or the most original eating method. One women's team took both honors with their technique involving toy dump trucks, a toy shovel, diapers and bonnets. Kegs, FAC's, dinners, shirts and hats were among the prizes awarded at the event.

About 500 dollars was raised at the pie-eating contest. Proceeds went to the Iowa Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

1980's Towers Residence Association's Springfest gave ISU students a chance to celebrate mild April temperatures.

Shirts and shoes were kicked off on the weekend of April 21 as local bands performed at the TRA courtyard. A small carnival was held in the parking lot, complete with games of chance. Various Towers' floors sponsored booths. Pie-throwing attracted the largest crowds.

Dorm students presented their way of living to high school seniors during "We've gotcha in 1980" Residence Hall Week (RHW).

RHW, March 16-23, sponsored a Disco Destruction Dance as a new addition to traditional Casino Night. A backgammon tournament and a College Bowl tournament highlighted the intellectual side of dorm living. A taco eating contest and "Name That Tune" contributed to the celebration hosted for 900 seniors this week.

Dance Marathon breaks record, again

Enthusiasm is high as the final tally is flashed on the board at the end of the 30-hour marathon. Photo by Ellis

The eighth annual Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon at Hilton Coliseum put Iowa State as number one in the nation for collegiate support of the cause.

Pledges and donations totaling $104,000 were raised at the March 14-15 event. Last year's (1979) record, also set by ISU, of $80,000, was broken.

The camera crew for NBC's "Real People Show" didn't appear as rumor had predicted. A good story was lost and ISU lost the publicity it deserved.

The 1,000 couples dancing were entertained during the course of the 30-hour marathon with such local celebrities as Floppy and Duane Ellet, as well as Donny Duncan, ISU head football coach. In addition, nightclub and TV comedian Fred Travejena appeared.

Live bands included the Boone River Boys, Luxury, Wapsie River, Dark Horse, Sidestreet, and the Litterer Brothers.

The winning couple was Steve Boots and Dee Zimmerman with $710 in pledges. The Hot Pepper Dance Company accumulated $12,000 in pledges and won the top group award. One member was chosen to present ISU's check at the Jerry Lewis telethon in September.

"Follow Your Rainbow" was the theme to Greek Week 1980 which ran April 13-19.

The annual Blood Drive and a service project highlighted the week. The Blood Drive collected over 2,000 pints. The service project was a "call-a-thon" to obtain pledges for the library addition. Members of ISU's Greek system collected $27,000.

Other highlights included the Greek Olympics, College Bowl and open houses for both parents and high school seniors. Friday and Saturday evenings the seniors were invited to house parties and street dances.

Sights and sounds abound during Homecoming '80

"Sights and Sounds of ISU", the theme for Homecoming '80, did abound from October 6-11. Lawn displays, a performance by Elton John, the musical comedy "Lock Up Your Daughters" and the football game between Iowa State and Kansas State provided a variety of entertainment for everyone.

A mass companing started off the week, followed by special events held on central campus each noon, like demonstrations and concerts. The week ended with Friday's pep rally "Thank God it's CY Day" and "Yell-Like Hell" contests.

Freak Week festivities gave ISU students the opportunity to celebrate alternative lifestyles.

Participants took advantage of the week of sunshine by listening to bands, to speakers and by playing frisbee.

Music by "Red and his Friends" and "Phil Dean and Friends" was featured. Open Line help service and anti-draft were featured speech topics.

The events ran from May 5-10, 1969 and were sponsored by Iowa P.I.R.G. (Public Interest Research Group).

A celebrity auction highlighted Campus Chest Week which ran Oct. 27-Nov. 7, 1980. Ann Lander's pencil, "Fonzie" Henry Winkler's autograph and Arnold Palmer's golf glove were prized items on the auction block. Local merchants also contributed goods and services. $2,000 was raised in the charity event.

Other money makers were "Big Band night" with the ISU Jazz Band, volleyball and billiard tournaments, health fair, fashion show, run-a-thon, raffle and the showing of "A Star is Born," "Deliverance," and the "Graduate" movies. A plant and candy sale in the union was also featured.

Club displays spark interest

The Third Annual Club Day was held at ISU October 28 in the Memorial Union. There are nearly 300 registered student organizations on campus and a variety of these clubs sponsored displays. Some of the different organizations that students were able to learn more about included sports, hobbies, social, international, cultural and departmental.

Participation in a club or organization will provide opportunities to meet other students, said Clarinda Nelson, a program advisor in Iowa State's Office of Student Life. Nelson said group participation will also aid in building or improving problem solving, decision-making and communication skills.

Club Day was sponsored by the Public Relations Student Society of America, the Greek Programming Committee and the Office of Student Life.

The 13th annual Engineers Week was highlighted by a special presentation by International Business Machines Corp., and their involvement with the space shuttle program for NASA.

Other activities during the week, which was held October 13-18, included an industrial display exhibit by 35 national firms in the Memorial Union, lectures on meeting the energy challenge and a lecture by Bernard Cohen, from the University of Pittsburgh, on "Health Impacts of Nuclear Power". Radio Astronomist John Basart, currently on leave from ISU, also discussed his work on the VLA telescope.

Christmas tree lighting almost falls victim to budget cutbacks

President W. Robert Parks praises the students for their support in helping to keep the Christmas tree lighting tradition alive. Photo by Gros

The Iowa State Christmas tree lighting tradition was rescued from the depths of budget cutbacks in 1980 by a group of construction engineering students.

The Iowa State student chapter of the Associated General Contractors of America (AGC), the Army ROTC and two social fraternities all requested permission to take over the lighting project but the AGC had access to a 100-foot crane which is necessary to string lights on the 80-foot central campus tree, so they were chosen over the other groups.

The central campus and Knoll Christmas tree lightings became victims of the budget crisis at ISU when a 3.6 appropriation reversion was ordered by the state this summer. Officials felt they could not justify the $1,600 expense needed to keep it in operation.

An editorial in the September issue of the Iowa State "Daily" urged students' support in the continuation of the tradition. It initiated Project UNLIT (Unite! No Lights in Tree!), calling for students to donate $1,600 to support the tree lighting. "Sure, frills should be the first to go in tough times," the "Daily" editorialized. "But, dang it, even Tiny Tim had a Christmas tree."

Only $80 was collected and was turned over to the Physical Plant to purchase more lights.

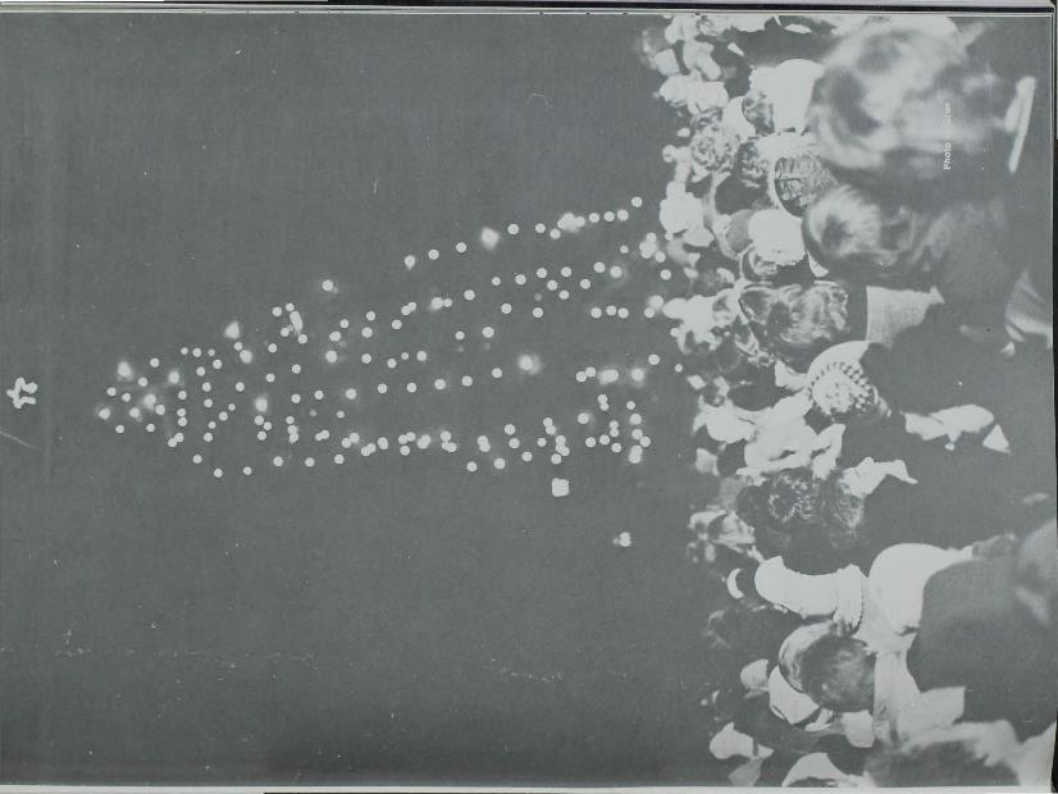

President W. Robert Parks spoke at the 35th annual ceremony and said he felt this year's Christmas tree lighting ceremony would be one of the most enjoyable for him because "the students of Iowa State have shown this year, both by their words and by their actions, that the traditional tree lighting project does mean a great deal to them."

Music was provided before and after the ceremony by the Iowa State Singers and carillon-player Richard von Grabow.

Everyone's life affected by women's movement: Friedan

The women's movement is the most important movement of the past decades, said Betty Friedan, author of the "Feminine Mystique" and Founder of the National Organization of Women (NOW).

"The women's movement reflects the ideology of America," Friedan said. "Equal opportunity is our human right," she said to an audience of 800 in the Sun Room at the Memorial Union.

Friedan came to ISU as part of Women's Week which ran Oct. 18-24, 1980.

Women's Week is designed to help students explore past gains, present issues and future needs concerning the status of women in society.

Other featured speakers included Evelyn Accad, author of "A Veil of Shame," Arlene Blum, leader of the first women's expedition to climb Annapurna II in the Himalayas and Muriel Bach, a Chicago actress.

Women's Week was sponsored by the University Committee on Women and funded by GSB.

Kaleidoquiz or KQ was played on the air. Teams called in their answers and were awarded points accordingly. A Hewlett Packard HP9845 computer for storing and tallying points was an addition to the Dec. 5-6, 1980 show.

The team of Bennett/Russell houses took first place in the contest.

Derby Days bounce into 54th year

Johnny Orr, the new men's basketball coach, kicked off the Sigma Chi's Derby Days events by being the first one to jump on the trampoline. The trampoline marathon is the largest event held during the Days and also raises the most money to donate to charity, said Greg Martin, who was in charge of Derby Days this year. Only girls are allowed to jump and almost every sorority and the Sigma Chi little sisters signed up girls to take turns jumping, he said.

During the 50 hours Derby Days ran this year, September 16-19, other activities such as a party and an olympics were held to raise more money.

The $1500 the Sigma Chi fraternity raised will go to the national chapter of the fraternity to be used to finance Wallace Village, a place for mentally handicapped children in Colorado, Martin said. Derby Days was started as a fundraiser in 1926 by the national chapter.

Monumental
problems face

Dr. Lawrence Boger discusses science's role in solving the world food problem. Photo by Grant

"Science cannot solve starvation," a keynote speaker of the 16th Annual Institute of Foreign Affairs said on Sunday, Dec. 7, 1980.

Dr. Lawrence Boger, president of Oklahoma State University said that no matter how much progress science makes we will still have "malnourishment, hunger and even starvation" in the world.

Although science cannot keep up with population growth, the importance of attempting to feed this population cannot be overstressed, Boger said.

"The people of this world must have food. We must do whatever possible to provide it," he said. "As true as it is simplistic, if we don't have food, we don't have people."

Boger urged the audience of about 200 to accept the challenge of solving the world starvation problem.

"The world food problems are monumental, but we must get on with it," he said.

Besides the population problem, Boger cited soil erosion and the lack of proper agricultural systems, such as irrigation, as standing in the way of eliminating starvation.

"There are promising developments underway in agriculture," Boger said.

"But," he added, "They're not all that great." "The future depends on agricultural ability," he said.

Boger also included distribution of food resources as an area that had problems.

The research into the solving of these problems must be "mission oriented," Boger said. He stressed the moral obligation the United States has towards developing countries and urged increased U. S. dollars to be spent on food aid. Currently the U.S. spends 2/10ths of one percent of its GNP on food aid. Boger granted that through this aid "more people are better fed than ever before. But, there are more people worse off than ever before too."

Nuclear destruction possible in third world: Harrington

"I think it is safe to say that the modern world was created out of the genocide of a superior group of people," Harrington said.

Harrington also blamed the poor economic development of these countries on capitalist intervention and cited India as an example. "India is the eleventh most advanced country in the world, with advanced steel industries and nuclear power plants. Yet this technology is awash in a sea of backwardness."

The only way the poverty and hunger of the Third World can be solved is to give massive amounts of financial aid to these countries, Harrington said. He praised a United Nations program which would create an international fund to stabilize commodity prices worldwide through a series of price ceilings and floors.

Other featured lectures during the week included Father Edicio de la Torre, priest, speaking on "Religion and Politics and the Middle-Class Christian" and Gerhard Elston, of Amnesty International, who talked in "The 1980's: Breakthrough for Human Rights or Return to Auschwitz."

Problems of Third World countries are so severe that worldwide nuclear destruction could be possible if nothing is done to help them, the chairman of the Democratic Socialist Organizing Committee said.

Michael Harrington spoke as part of the Institute on World Affairs Week Symposium, held December 7-11, on problems facing the world in the 1980's. Harrington said Libya and India have the ability to make atomic bombs. These countries, Iran, and Vietnam, have been poor and third class for over 400 years, ever since Western European countries used Third World inventions and ideas to conquer them, he said.

Broadway hit sells out in Ames

The director, Zach, watches each group of dancers who are competing for places in the chorus line. Photo by Bassett

Several Iowa State students and Ames residents danced out of C.Y. Stephens Auditorium after seeing "A Chorus Line," the New York Shakespeare Production that ran in Ames Nov. 7-9, 1980.

The company displayed energy and agility as it illustrated the lives and experiences of professional dancers through song and dance.

The opening number, "I Hope I Got It," depicts the anxieties and expectations shared by all dancers during try-outs; "Dance: Ten; Looks: Three" proves that fancy footwork isn't the only quality a judge may look for in a dancer; and "What I Did For Love" expresses the ardor and devotion dancers have for their profession.

The stage was barren of backdrops and props, typical of a stage used for dance try-outs and practices. Heavy decor wasn't necessary to dazzle the scene as the company's dynamic performance provided enough excitement to keep the sell-out audience dancing and singing to the parking lot.

Just over 300 people had the pleasure and privilege of witnessing the legendary folk singer, Arlo Guthrie, perform in the Maintenance Shop, Oct. 26, 1980 at 8 and 10 p.m.

Guthrie's five member band, Shenandoah, opened the musical event with a few numbers including a 4 minute Beatle medley covering every imaginable hit.

After the warm-up, Arlo Guthrie joined Shenandoah on stage to sing "Stealin'" and Charlie King's rather humorous anti-nuke song, "It's the Nukes that Must Go and Not Me."

His next number brought loud applause from the audience as Guthrie began singing the Steve Goodman hit he made famous, "City of New Orleans."

While he tuned his guitar between songs, Guthrie kept the audience entertained with his stories, one of which was about his ideas for making guitar tuning easier.

His talent for storytelling was exemplified, however, when he sang his two more famous stories set to music, "The Motorcycle Song," and "Alices Restaurant." The audience eagerly participated in the chorus of "Alices Restaurant."

Guthrie's talents came through as he went from guitar, to piano, to the harmonica throughout the evening.

Guthrie ended his set with "Mr. Customs Man," but he was not easily let go. The audience insisted with clapping and cheering that he return for an encore number. Guthrie returned with three. His first was what he described as his favorite song, "Amazing Grace." He explained to the audience that it was written by a captain of a slave ship who had finally seen the light and turned around to take his cargo of slaves back to their homeland.

His second song was "Will the Circle Be Unbroken?" and his final number of the evening was "I Can't Help Falling in Love With You."

Waring bids farewell on tour

The American legend, Fred Waring, and the Young Pennsylvanians celebrated 65 years of unforgettables with Waring's 1980-81 Farewell Tour. The performers entertained a sell-out crowd at C.Y. Stephens Auditorium Nov. 27, 1980.

Waring began his career as a member of a 4-man band when he and another classmate, Freddie Buck, joined his brother, Tom, and neighbor, Poley McClintock, to form the group "Waring's Banjazztra."

His interest in music grew as a student at Pennsylvania State College where the Waring band played the best parties.

The group was in demand throughout Pennsylvania as well as at universities out of state. They followed a series of many successes on college campuses and also at many clubs and theaters.

After the group renamed themselves "Waring's Pennsylvanians," under Fred's direction, the band began a list of firsts with their first record for Talking Machine Co., their first musical motion picture, "Syncopation," and their first Hollywood musical, "Rah, Rah Daze."

Waring expanded his "Big Band" to 55 pieces in 1932. His novelty group, consisting of musicians who sang and played, performed various kinds of music for many different audiences.

Since then Waring has engaged in a variety of projects, from developing and marketing the Waring Blendor to organizing his Music Workshop sessions.

Although Waring's ending his tours with the Young Pennsylvanians, he has no intention of retiring.

Country fans, young and old alike, turned out in full force to welcome the Statler Brothers to Ames, Dec. 14, 1980. The audience clapped their hands and stomped their feet in Hilton Coliseum as the Statler Brothers sang their songs of memories about the movies, women and heroes.

The Statler Brothers, backed up by the Statler Brothers' Cowboy Symphony Orchestra, performed old hits like "Bed of Roses" and "Flowers on the Wall." They also included many recent songs, including "Charlotte's Webb," "The Movies," and a new song about their 'country hero,' Gene Autry.

The Statler Brothers were gospel singers before turning country about 15 years ago. Returning to this gospel style, they performed "How Great Thou Art," blending their voices into the harmony they're known for nation-wide.

Before beginning a song from their newest album, "Tenth Anniversary," Statler Brother Don Reid had a special comment to make. Although everyone else seems to be turning to pop music, he said, "we're country and we're proud of it!" And they have every right to be.

Ames

MURST . . .

The Memorial Union Resident Summer Theatre, better known as MURST, provided Ames with five entertaining productions to pass the hot, humid evenings this summer.

On June 11, 1980 the MURST company opened their 7th season with the Cole Porter musical, "Kiss Me, Kate." The show ran from June 11-15 and June 18-21.

The only non-musical, but nevertheless an extremely popular show was "Same Time, Next Year." The Neil Simon play was performed June 25-29 and July 2-5.

"A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" was MURST's third performance in the 1980 series. Music and lyrics for the show were written by Stephen Sondheim and the show entertained Ames audiences July 9-13 and July 16-19.

MURST brought back a Union Board Theatre favorite when they performed "Godspell," July 23-27, 30, 31, and August 1 and 2. The company ended their 1980 season with the recent popular musical, "Grease." It played August 6-10 and August 13-16.

All performances were staged in the Maintenance Shop, where audiences could escape from the heat and enjoy an evening's entertainment in intimate surroundings.

"Good evening Ames, Iowa!" John Denver shouted to the near-capacity crowd at Hilton Coliseum on April 8, 1980.

Denver greeted his fans by joining them in their hand-clapping frenzy. And he really stirred up their applause with his opening song, "Starwood in Aspen."

Denver wanted to make sure everyone enjoyed themselves. "Whenever the fancy strikes, you just sing your little heart out," he said. His only stipulation was that the audience sing the same song he did.

Denver did "some old ones, some new ones, and a few surprises." The crowd sang to the familiar tunes of "Country Roads," "Follow Me," "Leaving on a Jet Plane," and "Fly Away." One of his new songs, "Dancin' With the Mountain" was an up-beat number that had the crowd whistling and shouting. And the audience also swayed to "The Ballade of St. Ann's Reel," another one of Denver's new songs.

More excitement was aroused when Denver took hold of his fiddle and screamed, "Clap your hands everybody!" And his fans did more than that. Thigh-slapping and foot-stomping accompanied his number. "Thank God I'm a Country Boy."

At the end of the number, some of the crowd members were on their feet. The band left the stage and the audience applauded furiously, anticipating an encore. But the concert was not over. Denver was only giving his crew a break, and he began a series of solos with one of his older songs, "Poems, Prayers and Promises."

Denver made the crowd laugh with a comical ballade entitled "Saturday Night in Toledo, Ohio." And although Denver ended the number by saying, "That's a terrible song," the solo received a great round of applause.

"Annie's Song" was Denver's last solo before the band returned, and then the mellow atmosphere was livened up with "High Sierra," an instrumental, bluegrass melody.

Before the end of his show, Denver played a few more of his oldies: "Back Home Again," "Rocky Mountain High," "The Eagle and the Hawk," and "Calypso." His final number was "This Old Guitar." The staging made it possible for every Denver-fan to get a full-face look at the star. An octagon platform rotated on the stage that was centered in the middle of the Coliseum.

The green plants that decorated the rust-colored stage and the various lighting techniques also added to the concert's atmosphere.

Denver began his 109-concert tour the last week in February, and Ames was one of the 89 cities among his scheduled tour.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, performed at C. Y. Stephens Auditorium May 15-17, 1980, while on their final concert tour with the 80-year-old music director.

Ormandy retired following the 1979-80 concert season after 44 years on the podium of the Philadelphia Orchestra, a record unequalled by any living conductor of any other major orchestra. Ormandy became the orchestra's conductor laureate.

Three concerts were given by the orchestra as part of the Ames

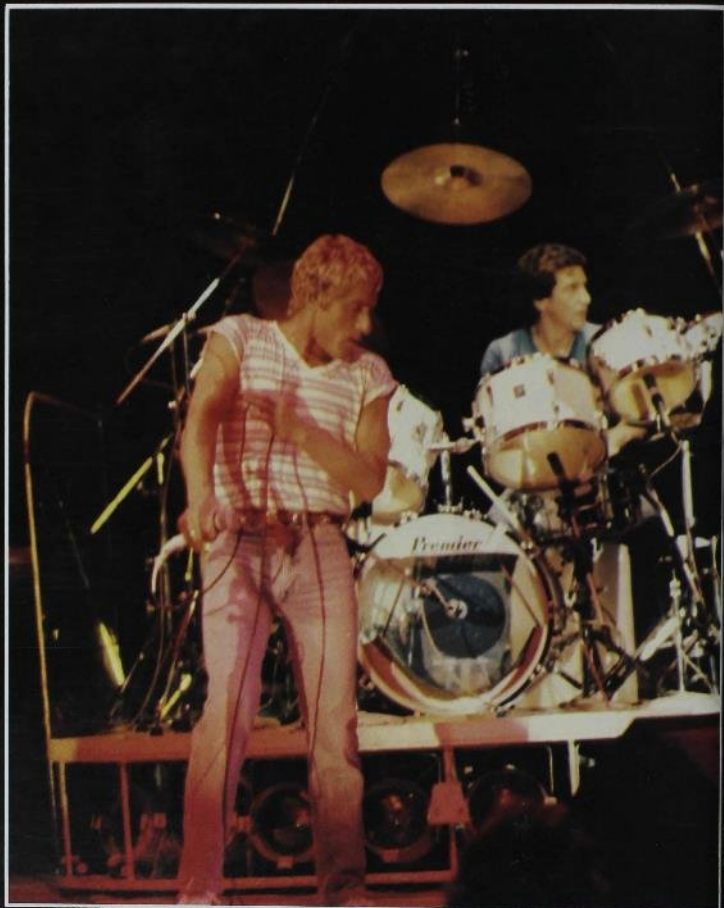

International Orchestra Festival's tenth season. The first evening's concert included the Leonore Overture No. 3, Op. 72b by Beethoven, Symphony No. 4 in E minor by Brahms, and "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky-Ravel.

Associate conductor William Smith conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Ames Festival Chorus in the performance of Symphony No. 2 in C minor, "Resurrection", by Gustav Mahler. The chorus, which included the Iowa State Singers, Chamber Singers and Oratorio Chorus, was prepared by Dr. Robert Molison, director of choral activities at Iowa State. Soloists for the performance were soprano Evelyn Mandac and mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff.

The Philadelphia Orchestra's final performance, again under the direction of Ormandy, included two works by Prokofieff, Classical Symphony in D major, Op. 25, and Suite from "The Love for Three Oranges", Op. 33a, and Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 43 by Sibelius.

A near sell-out crowd of 14,000 fans greeted the musical group, The Who, at Hilton Coliseum on April 29, 1980.

The Who made their only Iowa appearance in Ames and many fans waited three days in line for tickets to be guaranteed seats for the group's one night performance.

Lead singer Roger Daltrey and guitarist Pete Townshend jumped about the stage for most of the performance, keeping up with the beat of the tunes. Daltrey also kept his tradition of swinging his microphone and tearing apart tamborines.

Bassist John "The Ox" Entwistle strengthened the sounds of "My Generation" and "Summertime Blues" with his deep voice and bass guitar.

Kenney Jones, drums, and John "Rabbit" Bundrick, keyboard, were added to the group since the death of Keith Moon. Other additions to the group's act included a horn section to give The Who a new revived sound.

The band ended the show with a bow and playfully congratulated each other with hugs and headlocks.

"Jesus Christ Superstar" performed at M-Shop

Peter (Tim Folger) denies Jesus three times. Photo by Wilcox

The Student Union Board Theatre's spring production for 1980 was the rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar."

It was performed Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, May 1st through the 15th in the Maintenance Shop of the Memorial Union.

The limited area of the M-Shop didn't seem to hinder the performance of the production. The cast entered and exited all doors of the Shop, singing and dancing around the audience.

The stage was centrally located allowing the small audience to feel a part of the show. The actors' most subtle expressions could easily be seen. With the limited space of the Shop and the popularity of the production, the performers played for a full house everynight.

The musical, based on the last days of Christ's life, was written by Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice.

The Maintenance Shop production was directed by Scott Linn and musically directed by Tim Thomas and Kim Rental. The orchestra was under the direction of Kenneth Jolls of the ISU faculty.

Language isn't a barrier with Marcel Marceau

Marcel Marceau performs as "Bip".

Marcel Marceau, the French pantomimist, offered an alternative to green beer on St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1980, when he performed before a full house at C.Y. Stephens Auditorium.

Marcel opened the show with a kite flying act. As he carefully let out the string, a strong gust of wind started to carry him off with the kite.

One of Marceau's sketches was "Creation of the World". Accompanied by orchestra music, Marceau illustrated such characters as the serpent in the Garden of Eden.

The second half of the show was devoted to "Bip" character sketches. Bip is a clown decked out in a striped pullover, wearing a hat with a bouncing flower.

"Bip as a Professor of Botany" pleased the university audience. The professor discredited himself when he sat in a patch of poison ivy in front of his class.

Marceau also did "Bip as a China Salesman." The illusionary effect of Bip precariously balancing a stack of china plates made his act seem very real.

Without a word, Marceau demonstrated for two hours that language doesn't have to be a barrier.

SOV presents "Sweet Charity"

What's a girl to do when she's on the losing side of the husband-hunting game? The 1980 Stars Over Veishea cast might know. "Sweet Charity", a story of a young girl's search for romance was written by Neil Simon, music was by Cy Coleman. The musical was performed for an enthusiastic audiences in C.Y. Stephens Auditorium May 1-3.

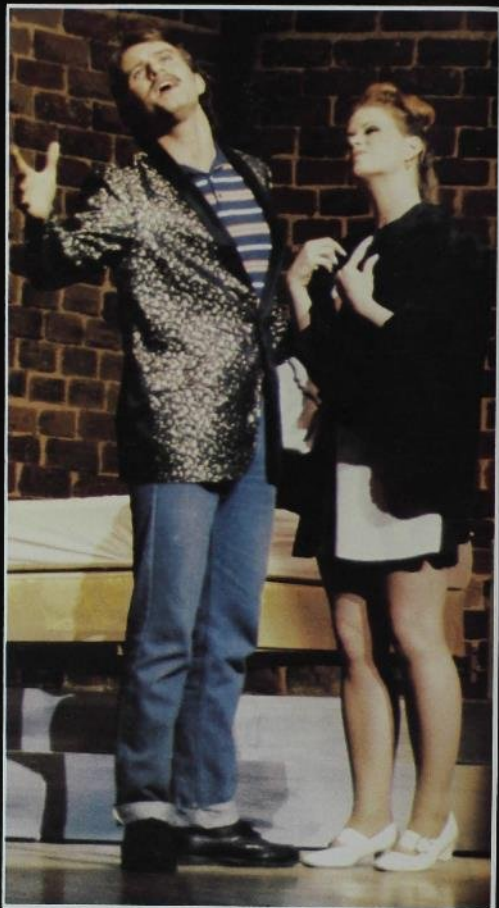

The story is about a dancehall girl, Charity Hope Valentine (Mary Drew), who's life is ruled by the "fickle finger of fate." After being pushed in the lake by her latest fiancé, Charity goes back to her dressing room and convinces friends Nickie and Helene (Gretchen Potter and Diane Norris) that they are missing too much in life.

Charity is jilted again in a not-so-innocent encounter with movie star Vittorio Vidal (Paul Larsen). But her confidence and optimism were plainly evident as she danced and sang her way through the famous "If They Could See Me Now" and the dance girls drew applause and whistles during their sexy performance of "Hey Big Spender!"

While searching for culture at the YMCA Charity meets Oscar (Dave Ambrosen) and it looks like things are finally going her way. But Oscar admits he can't marry her, and during this emotional confession Charity is once more knocked into the lake. Dragging herself from the same water wherein her story first began, Charity pragmatically asks, "Have you ever had one of those days?"

The production staff included, producer: Ruth Reinhardt, director: Kathy Davies, music director: Al Henkel, technical director: Don Hammel, choreographer: Margurite Bennett Folger, Orchestra director: Mark Whitlock.

"Lo and Behold" plays Fisher Theater twice

"Lo and Behold", a John Patrick comedy, played Fisher Theater twice in 1980. It premiered as a summer production and then returned in September to mark the opening of ISU Theater's 1980-81 season.

The play is set at the mansion of Milo Alcott, a cynical and eccentric novelist. Milo, realizing his life is about to end, commands in his will that his home should remain empty and intact so he may return to and enjoy a peaceful and tranquil eternity.

Unfortunately, things just aren't that easy for Milo. Instead of quiet solitude, Milo encounters nothing but chaos. Upon his return to the Alcott mansion, Milo is shocked to discover the presence of an Indian squaw, a southern belle, and a frustrated composer, all of whom are of a ghostly nature.

Not only must Milo overcome his spiritual intruders, but he must also contend with the living. Daisy, Milo's "maid for a day," moves into the mansion under the masquerade that she is Milo's illegitimate child. Things are further complicated when Daisy falls in love with Dr. Robert Dorsey, Milo's trusted friend and doctor. But the confusion climaxes when Daisy's fortune-seeker, ex-bo comes courting.

Chaos, comedy and suspense mount as Milo plays matchmaker for Daisy and Robert, and at the same time rids himself of his ghostly roommates. Finally after a bit of maneuvering, Milo gets his peaceful mansion to himself, and Daisy and Roger get each other. As for the other spiritual-type characters, they move on to find another home.

"Lo and Behold" was directed by David W. Waggoner. The eight member cast consisted of James R.

Fultz as Milo Alcott, Rodney Armentrout as Mr. Wingate, Elise Bagbey as Daisy Durdle, B. James Serpeno as Dr. Robert Dorsey, Patricia Rensink and Dathanne Kerber as Minnetonka Smallflower, Mark R. McDermott as Kenneth Moore, Charlene D. Bagbey as Honey Wainwright, and Roger J. Bagbey as Jack McDougall.

Artists display talent at "Art in the Park"

The threat of rain in some afternoon clouds didn't seem to dampen any spirits at the 10th Annual "Art in the Park," Sept. 6, 1980.

Artists from all over Iowa and some surrounding states began setting up their displays as early as 7 am. Not long after the buyers and browsers began to drift in.

"Art in the Park" was originally held at the Band Shell Park in east Ames with approximately 25 artists displaying their works. The art event soon outgrew this location and since, has been held at the grounds north of the Scheman Building at the ISU Center. This year there were approximately 150 artists there to display and sell their works.

The event is sponsored each year by the Octagon Art Center. Pottery, paintings, woodwork and photography were just some of the items a person could see or buy, along with numerous other hand-crafted items. Life-size, squeeking, monkey puppets, created by one artist, caught the attention of children as well as adults.

Throughout the day the crowd and artists were entertained by the Ames High School Brass Ensemble, the Onion Creek Cloggers, the Sunshine Singers, ISU Dance Group and others. Together, "Art in the Park" made for an enjoyable way to spend the afternoon.

Fosse's talent was "Dancin'" across ISU's stage

Take humor, technical and lighting effects, songs by artists such as George M. Cohan, Jerry Jeff Walker and Neil Diamond - add a company of talented young dancers - then sit back and watch it all come together in Bob Fosse's Broadway hit, "Dancin'." The production came to C.Y. Stephens Auditorium on Sept. 28, 1980.

"Dancin'" is a series of numbers grouped into three acts and tied together by narration. Numbers included "Recollections of an Old Dancer," based on the song "Mr. Bojangles;" "Benny's Number," dedicated to Swing artist Benny Goodman, and "America," a medley of patriotic songs.

Costumes, lighting and special effects enhanced the performance. In "Fourteen Feet," performers donned black outfits with fluorescent highlights. A blacklight revealed the moving lines of the dancers' bodies and their glowing eyes. A large yellow smiling face overlooked the performer in "A Manic Depressive's Lament."

The talent and additional theatrical effects displayed in "Dancin'" showed the audience why Fosse won the 1978 Tony Award for the show's choreography.

"You never know what may happen, spreadin' rythm around," sang the cast of "Ain't Misbehavin'" as they shook and shimmed the night away at C.Y. Stephens, Jan. 19 and 29.

"Ain't Misbehavin'" is a musical review of the songs of Fats Waller. A composer, singer and comedian, Waller is known as one of the greats in jazz and swing music.

The cast of five crooned their way through 25 of Waller's hits, beginning with the title song "Ain't Misbehavin'." All of the songs were from the 20's, 30's and 40's.

In a salute to the World War II effort, the women - Celeste Annette, Michele McCain and Adjora Faith McMillan - sang of the day "When the Nylons Bloom Again," and McCain urged people to get "Cash for Your Trash."

In "Find Out What They Like," Annette and McCain told women how to win a man's heart - "Find out what they like and how they like it, and let 'em have it just that way!"

Milton Craig Nealy and Client Bowers got the audience to participate in "Fat and Greasy." Nealy and Bowers described a fellow bar patron as having "chunks of fat" hanging over his chair and oil dripping from his hair. "What was he?" they asked. "Fat and Greasy!" the crowd responded enthusiastically.

The cast was backed-up by a 6-man band on a moving platform. An arch of piano keys frequently lit the stage, while musical director and pianist John McMinn pounded out the jazz tunes on an upright piano.

The night ended with a finale of songs by other people that Waller made hits. Included in these were "I'm Gonna Sit Right Down and Write Myself a Letter," and "I Can't Give You Anything But Love."

Chicago Brass Ensemble entertains at C.Y. Stephens

Quality chamber music came to C.Y. Stephens Auditorium on Jan. 16, in the form of the Chicago Brass Ensemble. The five members of the group are faculty members at Chicago-area universities. They tour together performing mostly Renaissance or twentieth century music.

For over an hour the group entertained the audience with their lively pieces and humorous introductions. At one point

Edward Kocher said the group would play some popular music, adding, "It was popular about 100 years ago."

An audience favorite was "American Brass Band Journal" by G.W.E. Friederich. The upbeat collection of old American favorites included a toe-tapping rendition of "Yankee Doodle."

The ensemble closed its performance with Jean Joseph Mouret's "Rondeau," better known to most as the theme song of Public Broadcasting's "Masterpiece Theater."

Reknown acappella singers visit ISU

A full house joyously welcomed the St. Olaf Choir to C. Y. Stephens Auditorium Jan. 30, for the first performance on the Choir's eight-state tour.

The 70-voice acappella choir from St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minnesota, has gained a reputation of excellence internationally. Last summer, the group toured Norway and performed at the Bergen International Festival. St. Olaf Choir performs under the direction of Kenneth Jennings.

The entire concert drew an excited response from the audience. Numbers included Exultate Deo by Hassler, Apostrophe to the Heavenly Hosts by Willan and Psalm 50 by F. Melius Christiansen, founder of the choir.

Highlights included a superb soprano solo and accompaniment by strings, organ and bells.

After two hours of inspirational song, the audience desired more. The Choir concluded with three numbers. The first was a spiritual, brought alive by an energetic tenor solo. The next number, a Swedish folk song, was also light and lively.

The last number was Beautiful Savior, also an arrangement by F. Melius Christiansen. This song reflected the real depth and spirit of the Choir. As voices flowed and penetrated, the excellence and precision that have long been accredited to the group were evident.

The St. Olaf Choir has a reputation well earned and recognized, especially by those who have seen them perform.

Everyone swings in "Oklahoma"

With a "Yippee-io-ee-ay," Rodgers and Hammerstein's "Oklahoma" burst onto the C.Y. Stephen's stage, Jan. 22, 23 and 24.

"Oklahoma" was produced by the Union Board Theater in conjunction with the Memorial Union's Wintergarden festival.

The musical takes place just after the turn of the century, in the territory of Oklahoma - soon to be a state.

It's the tale of two young people.

Laurey and Curly, who are very much in love, but don't always show it. But, someone else also has his heart set on Laurey - Jud, the lonely hired hand. Jud lives in the dark and dirty smokehouse on Laurey's farm.

Karen Salvesson and Paul Larsen portrayed Laurey and Curly, blending their voices for such well-known songs as "The Surrey with the Fringe on Top," and "People Will Say We're in Love."

Laurey lives with her Aunt Eller, played by Becky Long. Aunt Eller added many laughs to the night, in her high-top boots and spritely manner.

A big box social is planned for the evening at one of the local farms, and the people attending stop at Laurey and Aunt Eller's to "freshen-up." While there, Laurey and the territory girls perform, "Many a New Day," claiming that "many a new day will dawn" before they look back with regret over their past romances.

The box social is the highlight of the musical, with an exciting turn of events that keeps the audience on its toes.

The cast stomped their feet, dosey-doeed and high-kicked their way through the performance, with music provided by a 19-piece orchestra.

The orchestra was decked out, appropriately enough, in cowboy hats and western garb.

Women face realities of alcoholism in "Distilling Spirits"

The drama, "Distilling Spirits," deals with the uncertainties and illusions of six women as they confront each other in group therapy. Photo by George

In "Distilling Spirits," the audience is immediately confronted with the stark realities of alcoholism as the play explores the problems of six women patients and their doctor.

ISU Theatre presented the production in Fisher Theater Jan. 22-24, 29-31 and Feb. 5-7.

It is a drama which deals with the uncertainties, failures and illusions of the women as they confront each other in group therapy at an alcoholic treatment center.

Dean-Michael Dolan, the play's author, used comic material to illustrate tragedy. Despite the play's serious nature, the lines are often funny.

Joan (Patricia Rensink), the psychiatrist, appears as a cool professional, yet her ability to help the women is increasingly tested to the point where she is forced to confront herself.

Lesly (Lisa Fisk) is an emotionally disturbed woman who turns to drink as a solace against a husband who beats her.

Beryl (Ann E. Bucy) lets herself take life's hard knocks until she finds herself as a prostitute.

A young nun is also included in this ill-assorted group. Paula (Deby Reibsam) turns to drink after she feels guilt about questioning her religious beliefs.

Kelly (Jayne Kuehl) is a troubled young girl who is rebelling against her over-dominating mother.

Evelyn (Elise Bagbey) was fired from her job because she suffered from the delusion she was back in the 1800's.

Madeline (Kelli Hamlow) is an artist who is the bright, wealthy and talented member of the group. Yet, she also cannot face herself. In a chilling scene, Madeline runs away from the center and kills herself by drinking too much.

It is after the climax of her death that the group and their doctor realize that they must face themselves before they can deal with their problems.

Vincent Price is Oscar Wilde in "Diversions and Delights"

On Jan. 25, 1981, a full house in C.Y. Stephens Auditorium were treated to an evening with Oscar Wilde through the dramatic mastery of Vincent Price.

John Gay's "Diversions and Delights" opened as Price captured the audience by exclaiming, "You've come to see Oscar Wilde in the wicked flesh and here you have him. I am yours for the evening as such."

Holding the stage alone, Price depicted the eccentric Wilde in the waning years of his life. A successful playwright and celebrated conversationalist, Wilde became one of the most controversial figures in Victorian England. Wilde's career had been tainted with tragedy, contempt and at the same time adulation for the genius of his work.

The character, Wilde, discusses his life and his beliefs throughout the stunning performance. Price's respect for the character is evident, as Wilde is shown moving from an outwardly witty genius to a broken, disheartened man in the final scene.

"The artist stands alone. Well almost; the critic is always present," exclaimed Wilde. Any critics in the C.Y. Stephens audience were genuinely delighted to have spent an evening with Oscar Wilde as the performance of Vincent Price was rewarded with a standing ovation.

Lang reveals wit as well as talent

Throughout the evening Lang alternated playing his six-string, 12-string, and telling jokes. Photo by George.

As a part of Wintergarden festivities, Peter Lang put on two entertaining performances in the Maintenance Shop Jan. 24 at 7 and 9 pm. Lang described his guitar music as "classic American finger style." He explained that it originated at the turn of the century as bourgeois parlor music.

Without props or additional band members, just a six-string and 12-string guitar, Lang entertained the audiences with talent and wit. Lang opened his performance with a number titled "Spanish Fandango." After a couple more numbers, he then proceeded to tell a few off-color jokes and when the responses from the audience were positive, the jokes began to roll.

"Short Stuff" and a Silvester Wheeling number, "Guitar Rag" were but a couple of Langs songs throughout the evening.

As Lang put it early in his show, he is by his own words "an ace contemporary guitarist."

Lang recorded part of his album "Prime Cuts" in the Maintenance Shop in 1977.

Bruce Springsteen provides Ames with a memorable performance

For many it meant waiting in the bitter cold for over a week to get tickets. But when Jan. 29 arrived, the waiting was over and Bruce Springsteen and The E Street Band provided Ames with a classic rock'n roll concert that made it worth the wait.

Springsteen began the concert at 8:30pm and with only one short intermission, played until after midnight. He opened his concert with "Prove It All Night," and prove it all night he did — entertaining with unending energy.

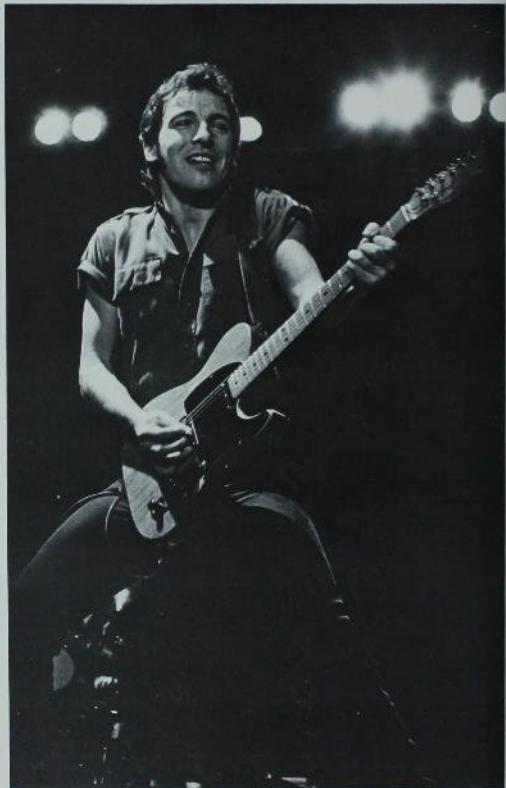

Early in his performance, Springsteen jumped off stage and walked into the audience singing "Tenth Avenue Freeze Out." After returning to stage, he sang the title cut from his "Darkness on the Edge of Town" album and a slow moving song, titled "Independence Day."

After a brief intermission, Springsteen returned to the stage recharged and opened with "Cadillac Ranch." During his second song of the set, "Sherry Darling," Springsteen threw his guitar over his back and grabbed a girl from the front row and began to dance on stage.

When it came time to perform "Hungry Heart," the audience was so fired up that Springsteen held the mike as the entire Hilton Coliseum sang the first verse.

Springsteen ended his second set with "Getaway," but it wasn't long before he was brought back for an encore which included "I'm a Rocker" and "Jungleland."

Still unsatisfied, the crowd brought him back for a second encore. The house lights went up, and as Springsteen began to play "Born to Run" it was evident that that was what they wanted to hear. His second encore ended with with his own rendition of "Devil with a Blue Dress," and as a train of people danced around the balcony above, Springsteen shouted "I can't go, I can't go" — and broke into one more verse.

Students create original entertainment for Varieties

The Annual Varieties Sweepstakes were held Feb. 6 and 7, 1981 in the Great Hall of the Memorial Union. It is a selection of three skits, five vignettes, and two emcees chosen from earlier tryouts.

The Sweepstakes '81 was emceed by the team of Jeff Conner and Kelly Sanner. Their skits included spoofs on the University of Iowa football coach Hayden Fry and K-Tel record commercials.

Alpha Delta Pi and Phi Delta Theta's skit, "A Haunted Mouse Tale," won first place in their category. It featured 16 mice fighting for their home. Some Hollywood bigshots want to use the deserted house the mice live in for a movie. But the rodents succeed in making sure that no humans take over their home. Delta Zeta and Sigma Phi Epsilon's skit "A Mysterious Train of Thought," won second place and "A Die-abolical Mystery" performed by Alpha Zeta Delta and Delta Upsilon took third place.

The vignettes for Sweepstakes were divided into two categories — musical and entertainment. Diane Norris won first place in the musical category, with her clear and powerful voice singing "The Rose," along with two other numbers. Carl Peterson took second place performing three of his own compositions on the piano. Rob Reiman, third place winner, accompanied himself on the guitar, singing two songs, one he had written himself and one was a Dan Fogelberg number.

On the entertainment side of the vignettes, The Bicuspids took first place. The 10 member group gave the audience a taste of real punk rock, complete with punk rock attire — wild outfits and pink hair.

Ventriloquist Dave Krahing and his side-kick Clyde kept the audience laughing, as they discussed the many women in Clyde's life.

ISU Theatre presents Lock Up Your Daughters

Mrs. Squeezum (Kate Gibbs) fans herself as she sings "When Does the Ravishing Begin?" Photo by Trumbo

A warning was given by the town crier to "Lock Up Your Daughters" in the musical comedy presented by the Iowa State University Theatre. The production premiered during summer 1980 and again played at Fisher Theater Oct. 9-11, 16-18, and 23-25, 1980.

The time was 1730 in England and Hilaret (Laura Runyan), a young woman of virtue, escapes her father's house to elope. She is to meet her lover, Captain Constance (Michael Inouye), but a street ruckus separates them. She finds herself alone on the street at night and is approached by Ramble (James Fultz), a gentleman wishing her favor. As she tries to free herself from his arms, a night watchman comes to her rescue. They are taken to the corrupt judge, Mr. Squeezum (Scott Dow), who puts Ramble in prison and tries to convince Hilaret to charge him with rape to gain financial betterment.

In the meantime, Captain Constance had come to defend a woman in the street fracas, and is mistakenly charged with rape and sent to jail by Judge Squeezum.

In jail we find that Constance and Ramble are old friends. Hilaret then decides to devise a plan to force old corrupt Judge Squeezum to release both men.

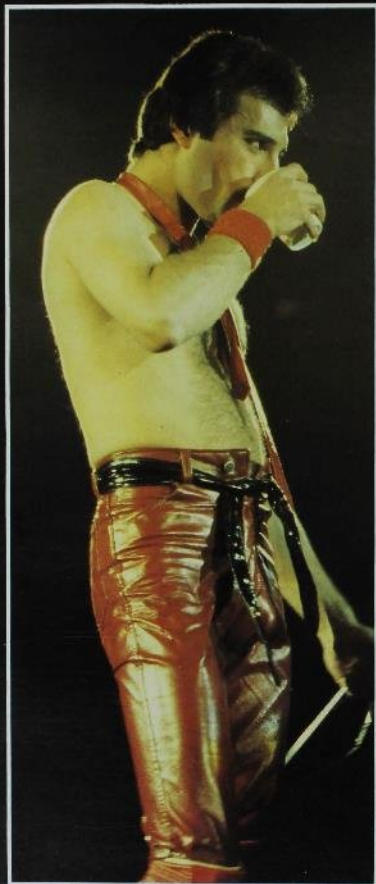

Judge Squeezum invites Hilaret to meet him at a hotel hoping to find her favor. Hilaret amuses him for awhile and has a friend waiting nearby to rescue her and accuse Judge Squeezum of rape. The judge is willing to let the men free to save his face. However, he then accuses Hilaret and the two men of devising the plan to discredit him and takes the case to court to send them all to jail.

Mrs. Squeezum (Kate Gibbs) comes to the rescue with a note the judge had written to Hilaret which revealed the old man's intentions. Mrs. Squeezum aids to discredit her husband because she has a special interest in Ramble, who sought her help for his release. The crooked judge is foiled and the others are freed.

The production was full of comedy and song. It was directed by Frank Brandt with music director, Kerby Kerber and choreographer, Cynthia Shumate.

Ames hails "Queen"

From an upbeat version of "Jailhouse Rock" to their ending proclamation that "We Are the Champions," Queen electrified an audience of 8,000 at Hilton Coliseum on Sept. 16, 1980.

The four-man English rock group put on an unforgettable light and sound show that made this performance more than just a concert. Moving panels of brightly colored lights tilted and blinked throughout the night, while sporadic explosions of light kept the audience's eyes on stage.

Lead singer Freddie Mercury, decked out in red leather pants and orange tie, strutted around the stage, belting out the vocals for songs such as "Crazy Little Thing Called Love," "Best Friend," and "Tie Your Mother Down." Lead guitarist Brian May, bass player John Deacon and drummer Roger Taylor contributed back-up vocals and special solos that helped create the harmonies and driving rhythms that Queen is known for.

Queen performed cuts from its latest album, "The Game," one of which was "Bite the Dust." This encore song brought the fans to their feet as soon as they heard the opening drumbeat.

Five Iowa State choral groups performed a variety of vocal music for parents and friends in the Memorial Union's Great Hall October 5, 1980.

This second annual "Collage of Choirs" was held as a part of Parents' Weekend activities, but also, according to Dr. Robert Molison, director of choral activities, to give each choir a chance to hear the others.

The choirs joined forces to open the concert, performing a 385-voice rendition of William Byrd's "Non nobis, Domine."

What followed was an entire spectrum of choral music styles, from the Zoltán Kodály masterwork "Jesus and the Traders" by the Iowa State Singers to the Cardinal Keynotes' arrangement of the Bell Telephone jingle "Reach Out."

Chamber Singers, a group specializing in madrigals and other chamber choir works, directed by Molison, performed three pieces by Thomas Morley, as well as "Fa Una Canzona" by Vecchi and "Amyntas with his Phyllis Fair" by Pilkington.

Student conductor Jay Kawarsky led the 160-voice University Chorus in "Fecit Potentiam" from Vivaldi's "Magnificat." The chorus also performed Randall Thompson's "Choose Something Like a Star" and an arrangement of the hymn "At the River" under the baton of Lynne Ransom.

Cardinal Keynotes, under the direction of Neil Bjurstrom, sang and moved to the beat of the familiar Duke Ellington piece "Don't Get Around Much Anymore" and William Spivery's "Operator."

Oratorio Choir followed with "A Choral Flourish" by Williams, "O Fili et Filiae" by Leising, "Soon-ah Will Be Done" by William Dawson, and the Yiddish folk song "Tumbalalaika." In addition to the Kodaly work, the Iowa State Singers performed "Deo Dicamus Gratias" by Homilius, "Dixit Maria" by Hassler and closed with the spiritual "Joshua," featuring tenor soloist David Gundrum.

Molison closed the concert by leading the combined choirs in the Alma Mater "The Bells of Iowa State".

Fans cruise down Commodore memory lane

A beam of red and an explosion of light flashed through Hilton Coliseum, introducing the Commodores. The band's first tour in two years included a performance in Ames on Oct. 4, 1980.

The group, spruced in white sequins, began their musical extravaganza with "Together," a song from their album Heroes. Their hit, "Brickhouse," followed, bringing the audience to its feet. Many people danced to the tune, singing, "She's a brickhouse . . ." While others just swayed by their seats.

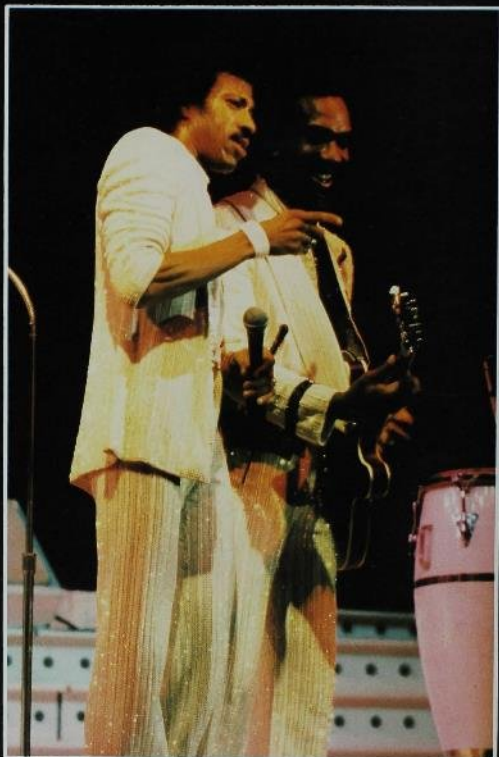

The swaying continued through "Sail On," another well-known number. And then the Commodores took their fans on a trip down Commodore memory lane. The journey featured "Machine Gun," "I Fell Sanctified," "Just to Be Close to You," "Too Hot to Trot" and "Wonderland of Love."

The program included two love ballads, which followed after a white baby grand piano drifted on stage amidst a cloudy haze. As lead singer Lionel Richie said, "For all the ladies in the house . . ." the group played "Three Times a Lady." The song "Still" followed for "all the lovers in the house."

Lasers, exploding gun shots and an array of multi-colored, spinning lights dazzled the stage during the song "Tear Down." After the sparkle of lights, the Commodores ended their show with a gospel number, "Jesus is Love."

Throughout the band's two-hour performance, members of the audience crowded near the foot of the stage, and Richie befriended several of the fans with handshakes.

Singer-guitarist, Emmylou Harris opened a night of musical variety at 8pm, Oct. 8, 1980 in C.Y. Stephens Auditorium.

With the exception of one brief intermission, she played continuously with her 7-member accompaniment — the Hot Band.

"Sister's Coming Home" was her opening number, a Willie Nelson tune. "Feeling Single, Seeing Double," "Even Cowgirls Get the Blues," and John Fogarty's "Bad Moon Rising" were just a few of the numbers that made up her first set.

After the brief intermission Harris returned to the stage alone to sing "To Daddy," a Dolly Parton number. Following "To Daddy" the band rejoined her to sing "The Boxer," originally written by Paul Simon and recorded on her latest album, "Roses in the Snow." The audience was then entertained with "Till I Gain Control Again," "Save the Last Dance For Me," and Lennon and McCartney's "Here, There, and Everywhere," among others.

A particularly touching part of her performance came when she dedicated the song titled "Wheels," written by the late Gram Parsons, to Polly Parsons his daughter who was viewing the performance that night. As many may recall, Gram Parsons was instrumental in giving Emmylou Harris her start.

With enthusiasm the crowd cheered her back for an encore and Harris provided them with "One of These Days."

Saturday night's alright!!

In the midst of a cloud of smoke and with a flash of light, Elton John appeared on stage at Hilton Coliseum, Oct. 11, 1980.

Absent his unique-styled glasses, but donned in a thicker head of hair, the "new" Elton opened with an old hit "Funeral for a Friend." The number brought a standing ovation from the crowd of 11,500.

Hit after hit rolled off the keyboard as he played "Tiny Dancer," "Goodbye Yellow Brick Road," "Rocket Man," and "Philadelphia Freedom" without a break. The crowd reacted to the music and comical antics of the pop rock performer with screams, shouts, and dancing.

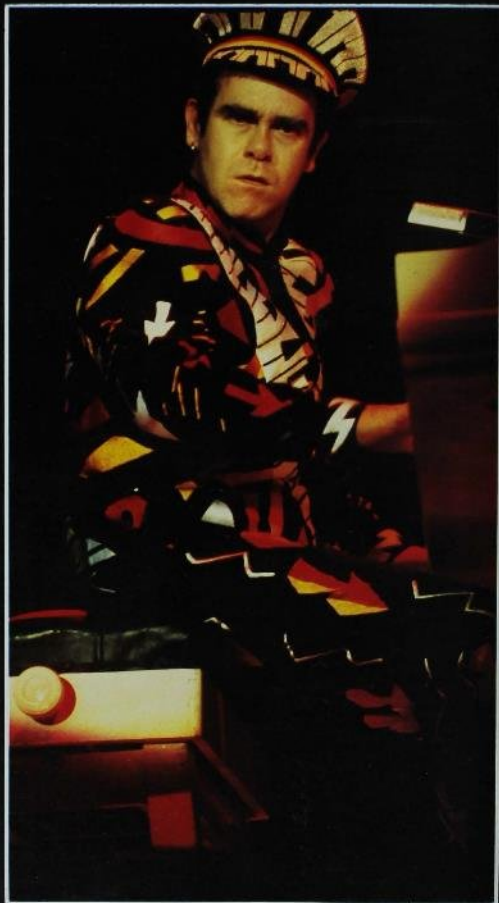

During his one costume change, Elton's five-piece band, including James Newton Howard - keyboard, Richie Zito - guitar, Tim Renwick - guitar, Dee Murray - bass, and Nigel Olsen - drummer, played a few numbers written by Nigel Olsen.

Elton John then returned, clad in a blue and white satin and mirrored baseball suit, to finish the second set. The biggest crowd pleasers were "Saturday," and "Bennie and the Jets." Energy and enthusiasm filled Hilton as Elton John pounded the piano, kicked his piano stool out from under him, and strutted across the stage, involving the audience in singing.

The second set also included a couple numbers from his latest album "21 at 33" one of which was his recent hit "Little Jeannie."

The crowd wouldn't let him leave before playing his famous love ballad "Your Song," his first encore number. They then called him back for one more song and Elton provided them with "Get Up and Dance."

The National Opera Touring Company performs "La Traviata" in Ames

Ames opera fans were treated to an excellent performance of Verdi's "La Traviata" on Oct. 21, 1980.

The tragic love story of Violetta and Alfredo was performed masterfully at C.Y. Stephens by the National Opera Touring Company, a division of the New York City Opera. This was the company's first season and they were under the general direction of Beverly Sills.

Soprano, Elizabeth Pruett sang and played the part of Violetta, a charming but chronically ill courtesan of mid-19th century France. Her doting lover Alfredo, sang and played by Gerald Grahame, was moving as he won Violetta's heart, moved in with her and then mysteriously lost her. Grahame's tenor was especially pure.

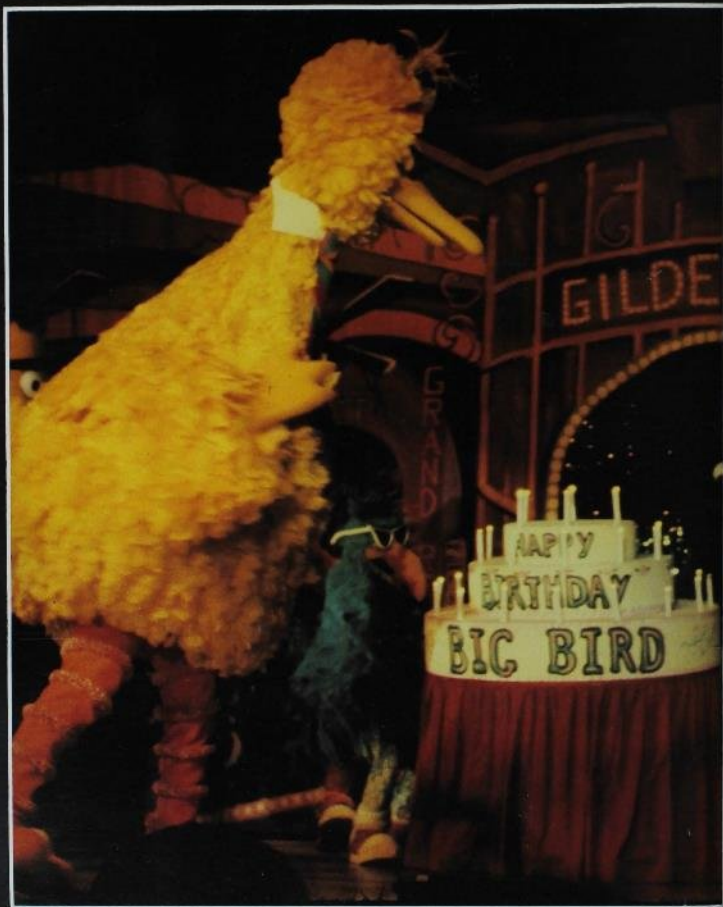

Alfredo's father, Giorgio Germont, sang and played by Vernon Hartman, had secretly offered a plea to Violetta to leave Alfredo. Giorgio feared the scandal of their living arrangement would ruin a possible marriage of Alfredo's sister. The rich baritone of Giorgio was convincing as Violetta tearfully agreed to leave Alfredo and return to her former life.

The loss was too much for the estranged lovers to bear. Alfredo, in an immature act, humiliated Violetta in public. Violetta's devastation caused further deterioration of her health.

At the close of the opera, on Violetta's deathbed, audience members can only find comfort from the tragedy by the last minute appearance of Alfredo. All is forgiven before Violetta dies in his arms.

"Can you tell me how to get, how to get to Sesame Street?" You didn't have to hunt or travel very far to find Sesame Street. On Oct. 19, 1980, "Sesame Street Live" came to Hilton Coliseum.

Peppy strands of the show's theme song bounced over the crowd as they awaited the curtain opening. As the curtain drew open, the audience found Chief Inspector Fortescu Farquar and the Constables of the New York City Department of Missing Birds hunting for a — what else, missing bird!

Bob Shipstad's production included the bigger than life Sesame Street Muppets who were created especially for the show by Jim Henson. These delightful characters helped the inspector find Big Bird.

Laughter rang throughout the auditorium when Ernie wheeled Bert, blushing in the buff in the bathtub, down the lighted walkway. Fun-loving Ernie suggested they sing "Rubber Ducky" to lure Big Bird home. Children, crowded around the walkway, joined him in the perky melody.

Super Grover, Cookie Monster, and The Count uncorked bird-finding procedures which didn't work. Even Oscar the Grouch popped out of his trash can to offer suggestions.

Much to the fans' horror, Big Bird was finally found in the company of Phineas T. Barnswallow and his Barnstorming Aviary. Unknowingly, he signed a contract binding him to Barnswallow.

Cookie Monster decided the document looked, felt and smelled legal. "It even tastes legal!" he exclaimed while swallowing the contract.

Since the binding contract no longer existed, Big Bird was free to go home to Sesame Street with his friends.

Enthusiastically, the spectators clapped to "We're Goin' Home," a most personal farewell from the Muppets of Sesame Street and their neighborhood friends.

Ronstadt's repertoire features a variety of songs

Clad in new wave-style hot pants, boots, black net stockings and a leopard-skin shirt, Linda Ronstadt entertained a crowd of about 10,500 in Hilton Coliseum Oct. 24, 1980.

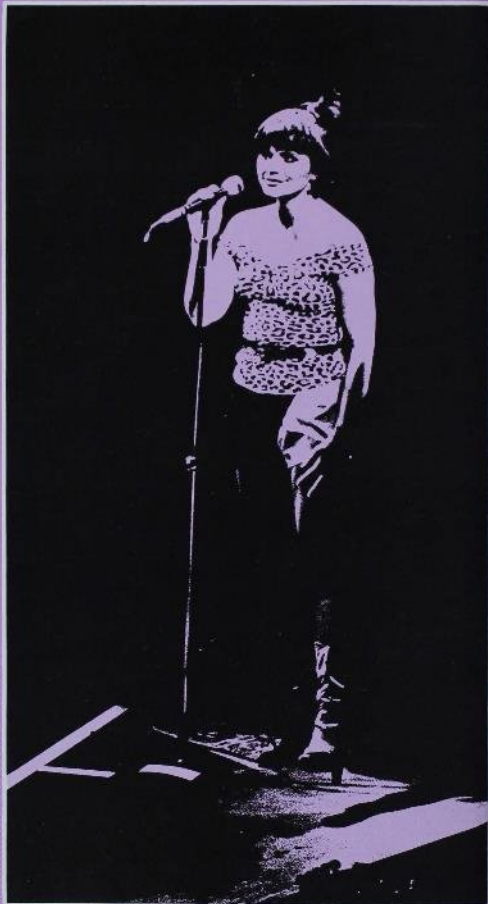

Ronstadt opened with "Mad Love," the title song from her most recent album, and she sang many of her old hits during the show.

Ronstadt featured many types of music, from country and western "Silver Threads and Golden Needles," to ballads like "Blue Bayou," and new waves "I Can't Let Go" and "How Do I Make You."

Soloists from her seven-member back-up band were featured in "You're No Good." During the concert, Ronstadt featured material by Elvis Costello, J.D. Souther, Hank Williams, and others.

The 20-song set lasted about 80 minutes. Ronstadt returned to the stage to sing "Heat Wave," and "Desperado" after the crowd cheered her back for two encores.

Scrooge visits Ames in "A Christmas Carol"

Iowa State University Theatre presented the play in Fisher Theater on four evenings and five afternoons in December.

Narrated by Dickens (Keith Wirtz), the play portrays the life of Ebenezer Scrooge (David Mattheis). Scrooge hated Christmas and became hardened and nasty. Children sang carols to him, but he brushed them away. He was stingy with the coal to heat his office so his employee, Mr. Cratchit (Todd Rasmuson), worked in the cold.

On Christmas Eve, Scrooge went to bed only to be awakened by twelve chimes as the ghost of Christmas Past (Mark-John Conley) appears to take him back in time.

Scrooge sees young Ebenezer (Joe Ochseneiter) at past Christmas parties with his young love, Belle (Kanny Spencer).

Just as Scrooge gets back to bed, he is visited by the ghost of Christmas Present (Michael Fisher). They look in on the Cratchit family Christmas dinner where the Cratchits barely have enough to eat. But Mr. Cratchit offers a thankful toast to Scrooge as he looks on. Cratchit's handicapped son, Tiny Tim (Tim Gouran) also offers the toast, "God bless us, everyone."

Scrooge barely gets to bed when the ghost of Christmas Future (John Rohling) takes him to watch men carry caskets into the graveyard. The first is Tiny Tim. The suffering family is seen by Scrooge as they mourn. Another casket is carried and Scrooge realizes it is his own. The beggars sell his meager possessions for a few bits as Scrooge watches on.

Returning to his home, Scrooge can't believe what he has seen, but vows to change. He walks down the street happy to find it is Christmas day. He gives money to charity, asks the children to sing carols and hires a boy to get the biggest turkey in the store window and deliver it to the Cratchit's house for Christmas dinner.

Scrooge's kindness didn't end with the holiday, though. He gave Mr. Cratchit a raise and became a good friend of Tiny Tim's.

Tiny Tim concludes the story with his well-known, "God bless us, everyone."

The magnificence of Christmas filled C.Y. Stephens Auditorium in the 25th Annual Christmas Festival presented by the Iowa State music department in two evening performances Dec. 13 and 14, 1980.

Iowa State Brass Choir opened the performance with three numbers including the favorite, "Lo, how a rose e'er blooming." David Stuart directed the Brass Choir.

The voices of the Oratorio Choir and Iowa State Singers joined in singing Johann Sebastian Bach's "Magnificat."

The choirs were accompanied by the Iowa State Symphony Orchestra and the production was conducted by Robert Molison.

Guests and faculty members were featured in various solos throughout the presentation of "Magnificat."

Wolff, Davis lead golfers

Men's golf coach Dave Anderson termed the team's 1980 spring season as one of "ups and downs."

Two of the season's ups were the Cyclone Invitational and the Heart of America Classic, Anderson said.

In the Cyclone Invitational, at Veenker Golf Course April 11-13, the Iowa State Gold team finished second out of 12 teams.

The Cyclones later traveled to the Heart of America Classic in Warrensburg, Missouri on April 25-26. The team finished third out of 18 teams with Greg Wolff taking medalist honors for the Cyclones with a score of 140.

Wolff and Clay Davis, senior co-captains, led the team through meets played before the Big Eight Championships on May 12-13. Wolff was first on the team with an average of 75.4 and Davis was second with a 76.4 average.

Along with his first place finish in the Heart of America Classic, Wolff garnered a fourth place finish in the Park College Invitational on April 3-4.

Davis grabbed a fifth place finish in the Cyclone Invitational while playing for the Gold squad.

Chris Donielson, a freshman, took champion honors at the state Big Four Meet April 8 in Des Moines by carding a score of 78.

With the return of golfers like Terry Anderson, Tony Butzer and Donielson and several junior college and high school recruits, Anderson feels the prospects for next season are very good.

All-American Thomas leaves team

The 1980 women's spring golf team was paced by All-American Barb Thomas.

Thomas led the team in average strokes per round and qualified for the AIAW Nationals June 11-14 in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Thomas averaged 78.38 strokes for all rounds in the spring season and 75.2 for her 10 best rounds. Cyclone captain Ann Barnes was second on the team in both categories.

The team opened the season on a good note with a fourth place finish out of 17 teams in the Ohio State Invitational. Thomas' 238 total placed her third in the 90-player field.

After finishing fourth in the Big Eight meet on April 28-30, the team won a meet against Iowa and Kansas in Minneapolis on May 10-11.

Thomas left the team after the spring season for defending national champion University of Tulsa. But the Cyclones had Connie Carlson, the 1980 Iowa State High School and State Junior Girls champion.

The Cyclones started the season September 5th by unsuccessfully defending their title in the Wisconsin Invitational. The team finished second out of 16 teams.

The golfers went on to compete in the Iowa State Invitational September 26-27 at Veenker Golf Course.

All-Americans Dave Korir and John Scheetz paced the 1980 men's track team through a successful season.

Korir, who won All-American honors for the fourth time, won the 800 meters in the outdoor Big Eight championships and went on to finish third in the NCAA Championships. Scheetz took the title in the shotput in the Big Eight outdoors and went on to finish ninth in the NCAA.

At the Big Eight indoor meet, the Cyclones ran to a third place finish, their highest indoor finish ever. The team boasted champions in Bob Verbeeck in the mile and Scheetz in the shotput. Scheetz went on to finish seventh and Verbeeck eighth in their events as the NCAA Championships.

The team's third place finish was very pleasing to Head Coach Bill Bergan. Bergan said the high finish was one of the season's highlights.

Another of the season's high points, Bergan said, was the team's fifth place finish in the Big Eight outdoor meet. The Cyclones were only eight points from second place and their chances were severely hindered by injuries to key personnel.

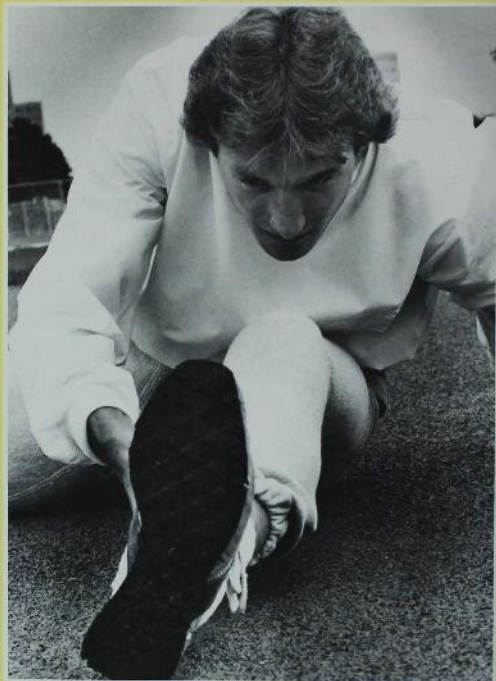

Bergan said he was also pleased by Korir's and Scheetz' garnering of All-American honors.

In addition to his Big Eight and NCAA finishes, Korir also won the TFA/USA National Championship in the 800 meters and finished second in the National AAU meet in the same event.

Two of the season's team highlights were the big margins of victory in the indoor and outdoor Big Four meets. The Cyclones won the indoor Big Four meet by 47 points and walked away with the outdoor title by 45½ points.

Iowa State will return several quality performers, including school record-holders Scheetz, Verbeeck, discus-thrower Scott Crowell and long-distance runner Richard Kaitany. These returnees, Bergan said, along with several strong incoming freshman, will provide the Cyclones with a very talented squad next year.

The 1980 Women's track season was one of steady improvement, according to first-year coach Ron Renko.

Several school records were set during the season and the team's improvement was seen in the Big Eight meet May 2-3, Renko said.

Running against many tough teams and several world-class track stars, the team fought to a third place finish in the meet.

Another of the season's highlights, Renko said, was the performance of Kim Whitehead in the Olympic trials. Whitehead finished second in the trials after finishing fourth in the AIAW Nationals.

The indoor season, which began January 19th at the Badger Classic, got off to a shaky start because of several injuries, Renko said. The team suffered from a lack of depth and injuries to key personnel only added to the problem.

The problem of lack of depth is one thing the team must face again in the coming years, Renko said. Although he is "real optimistic" about next season, Renko said the problem of depth must be solved.

"We will probably face a lack of depth for the next couple of years. It will take that long to build it back up through recruiting."

A combination of returning starters, youngsters with some experience and excellent recruits all gave Iowa State's baseball coach, Clair Rierson, reason to have high hopes before the 1980 season started.

Bluff Knott's hopes were dashed by season's end, when the Cyclones had emerged with a 22-30 record, 5-15 in the Big Eight.

The team started the season on a good note by returning from a trip to Florida with a 3-4 mark. Designated hitter Greg Lempe was 12 for 30 on the trip with two home runs and Rierson was pleased with the team's performance.

After series with Nevada-Las Vegas and Iowa, the Cyclones headed into their first Big Eight game against Oklahoma State with an 8-14 record. The team split two games with the Cowboys in what was to be the first of many close series with conference opponents.

The season ended on a good note when the Cyclones swept four straight games from Creighton.

The leading hitter for Iowa State was outfielder D.C. Ross with a .343 average. Greg Lempe led the team in hitting runs with ten. Lempe also sported a .327 average.

For the pitching staff, the best ERA belonged to Dan Arends with 1.77. The best record on the team was Kevin Gaw with a 4-1 mark.

Corrigan replaces Rierson after season

Pete Seyfer, the Cyclone's third baseman, was named winner of the Cap Timm award, given to the player who best exemplifies Cyclone baseball on and off the field. First and third baseman Mike Hocutt received the Mike Curran Award for Rookie of the Year. Hocutt led the team in RBI's with 40.

The team's most valuable pitcher was Tim Riley, who compiled a 5-6 record while pitching 76 2/3 innings.

After the season, Clair Rierson left Iowa State and was replaced by assistant Larry Corrigan. Corrigan later announced the signing of 13 new players, including three transfers from the University of Colorado. Iowa State also hired Colorado's former head coach, Larry Schultz, onto the coaching staff.

With the new signees, plus the return of several players from last year, Corrigan said he was confident the Cyclone coaching staff could bring a winner to Iowa State.

Tailgaters go all out

Tailgating can be very simple or complicated. These two alumni opted to make a big affair of it, complete with wine and flowers. Photo by Ellis

The atmosphere surrounding a football game at Iowa State often borders on the carnival. There's loud music, balloons, marching bands and funny hats. But even before the game starts, students and alumni alike are enjoying the atmosphere by sitting in the parking lots and tailgating.

Tailgating has become as much a part of Iowa State football as Donnie Duncan, cheerleaders and Cy. A football game at Iowa State isn't right unless you sit outside the stadium for an hour or two and indulge in some pre-game festivities.

And the festivities range from simply drinking a few beers to getting fired up to setting up a feast on a table complete with tablecloth, candles and flowers.

It's not just students who indulge, either. Many Cyclone alumni come to the game in vans and RV's and set up grills and elaborate bars. The scent of barbecuing steak and chicken is often noticeable over much of the parking lot.

What's the purpose of all this tailgating? As one student put it:

"It's the weekend and it's football season. This is a nice way to get things started."

The Iowa State softball team was involved in several close games en route to a 22-11 spring season. That record, combined with the 1-8 mark last fall, left the team with an overall record of 23-19.

Coming off the best record in school history last spring and returning seven starters off that team, Head Coach Lucille Gecewicz was optimistic at the season's start.

The team faced a tough task in their season opener, facing defending national champion Texas Women's University on March 28. The Pioneers of TWU proved to be too much for the Cyclones by knocking out a 4-0 win.

The TWU game was the first of many close contests throughout the year. The Cyclones featured a good pitching staff, a solid defense and so were rarely involved in many high-scoring games.

The team finished the regular season by winning the Iowa State Invitational May 2-3. The Cyclones won five straight to capture the crown, including a 1-0, 11-inning victory over Missouri in the final game.

The team finished the spring season by nailing down third in the AIAW Region 6 Tournament. The Cyclones, who were seeded fourth in the double elimination tournament, won their first two games by 1-0 scores over Minnesota and Iowa. The team then fell by identical 2-0 scores to Southwest Missouri State and Creighton.

The 1980 fall season saw the softball team sporting a new coach. Gecewicz had departed from Ames and was replaced by Kelly Phipps from national champion Utah State. Phipps greeted 10 letterwinners from last spring, including two-time All-Big Eight pitcher Tammy Rueckert and leading hitter Laura Budweg. Budweg slugged out a .353 average in the spring season.

One highlight of the fall season was the Cyclones' second-place finish in the Iowa State Invitational. Despite winning four out of five games, the team finished second to Creighton. Creighton blasted out twelve hits in drubbing the Cyclones in the final, 11-1.

Football outlook good

The 1980 version of Iowa State football was greeted with much optimism by fans and students alike. Head Coach Donnie Duncan greeted eleven regulars from the injury-riddled 1979 season, and many players injured in the previous year's campaign were back in good health.

The Cyclones opened the season on home ground against Northeast on September 13th.

After another home date against San Jose State on September 20th, Iowa State traveled to Iowa City for Chapter IV of the Iowa Super Bowl.

The Cyclones went into the game hoping to avenge last year's 30-14 pasting.

Colorado State came to Ames for the traditional Parents Day game on October 4th. The next weekend saw Kansas State journeying to Ames for the Cyclones' Homecoming game and also the Big Eight opener.

Iowa State traveled to Kansas on October 18th and the traditionally tough Oklahoma Sooners ventured to Ames the next weekend.

The Cyclone gridders took to the road for their next two Big Eight appearances.

On November 1st, the Cyclones made the trip to Boulder for their game against Colorado. Many Iowa State faithful traveled to the game as part of Migration.

The next weekend, the Cyclones were in Columbia for a contest with Missouri.

Iowa State finished up the home season with a battle against the powerful Cornhuskers of Nebraska. The Cyclones were on the road for their final regular season game against Oklahoma State November 22nd.

Cyclone quips and quotes

A lot of football players have been stereotyped as being somewhat less than brilliant, but ISU's players have demonstrated personalities all their own.

Split end Jim Knuth drew many comments from Head Coach Donnie Duncan during the season, both about his playing ability and his size.

Duncan said, "With a receiver who is 6-7 and can catch the ball, a coach can tell the quarterback, 'Just throw it toward South Dakota. Jim will get it.'"

And after the Cyclones' 10-7 victory over Iowa, in which Rocky Gillis, who is 5-8, congratulated Knuth after he caught a touchdown pass, Duncan said, "It looked like Rocky hit Jim in the navel. That's about as high as he comes up to Jim."

Cyclone defensive tackle Shamus McDonough isn't one to back away from a challenge. Whether he's playing in front of 50,000 fans or exploring the ocean's depths, McDonough loves to do things with his body. His latest adventure is scuba diving.

"Football and scuba are entirely different, but both are exciting for me," he said. "It's really a unique feeling being far down in the water and having to keep a lookout for sharks, but it's just as much of a unique feeling playing football in front of 50,000 people."

On a given Thursday night, you will probably find Iowa State's offensive linemen, nicknamed the "Happy Hogs", enjoying one of their favorite pastimes - eating. The Hogs assemble on Thursdays to indulge in their favorite food, pizza. Center Jim Meyer explained, "We go over to Happy Joe's and get together for an hour or so. It's really nice to be together and it's also a good way to get fat."

Senior Cyclone fullback Jack Seabrooke and Coach Donnie Duncan exchanged words of praise for each other during the season. Said Duncan of Seabrooke, "He is a workhorse in a game and a workhorse in practice. You never see Jack run the ball without great effort."

Seabrooke praised Duncan and his staff's philosophy. "Coach Duncan's staff emits personality, where coaches before have emitted pressure."

Cyclone fans and coaches alike waited with baited breath for a look at newcomer Dwayne Crutchfield in the opening game. But Crutchfield admitted he was nervous before the game.

"I woke up at four a.m. and couldn't go back to sleep. I think I had one sip of water for a pre-game meal," Crutchfield said.

But nervous or not, Crutchfield was more than impressive for the Cyclones, as Donnie Duncan commented:

"The mark of a great back is when he can make yards when the yards aren't there and Dwayne does that."

Senior defensive tackle Cal Jacobs emphasized the positive when many people questioned whether the Cyclones were for real during the early part of the season.

"Like the 1969 Mets, you gotta believe."

Steady improvement was the key for the Iowa State women's tennis team, according to coach Christa Townsend.

The team compiled an 8-14 record in the spring, which Townsend said was an improvement from the previous fall. One of the highlights was the team's finish in the Big Eight championships, she added.

The Cyclone placed fifth in the tournament, and were only three points out of third place. Kim Wishard placed third at first singles, as did Patti Paone at third singles. The doubles team of Wishard and Paone was also third at first doubles.

The team later qualified for the AIAW Region 6 Tournament, but were eliminated in the first round. Townsend said she was disappointed in the team's outcome, but said part of that could be blamed on injuries.

For the spring season, Wishard compiled a 21-11 record and Karen Zalesky was 15-14. The doubles team of Wishard and Paone finished the season at 20-10.

Townsend said she knew the team would be good going into the fall season and termed the fall outcome as "a very pleasant surprise."

The Cyclones ended the fall campaign with an 8-2 mark, and all singles and doubles players ended the season with winning records. Townsend said there were three teams she wanted to beat going into the season - Drake, Missouri and Iowa. The team accomplished two-thirds of her goal by beating Drake, 6-3 and Missouri, 5-4.

The squad lost to Iowa, 3-6, but Townsend said the match was very close. She added that in the spring, it could be a different story.

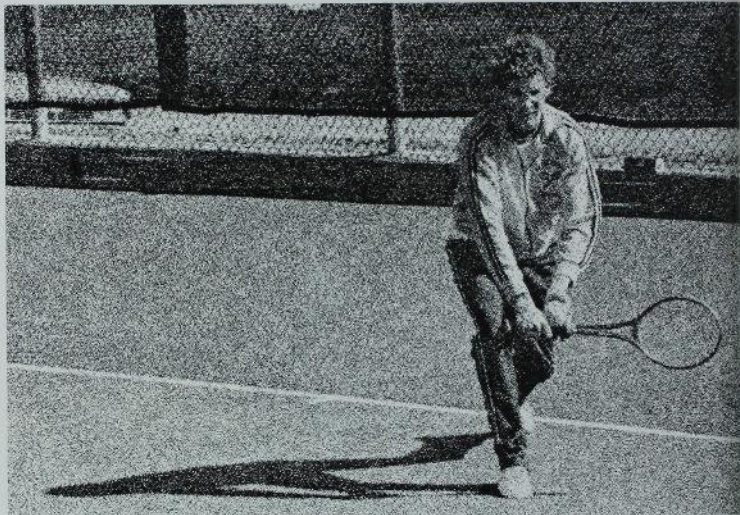

The leaders for the fall season were Wishard with an 8-2 record and Paone, who racked up a perfect 10-0 mark. In doubles, Zalesky and Cathy Steele compiled a 7-2 record and Wishard and Paone were 4-1.

If the squad continues to improve as it has in the last year, Townsend said, the Cyclones could be contenders for the AIAW Region 6 title in the spring.

The 1980 men's tennis team suffered through a disappointing season, falling to 10-13 dual record after a 17-14 mark in 1979.

The squad fared well against non-conference opponents, but failed to win a match against Big Eight foes, registering an 0-7 mark in the conference.

The team lost their first match of the year against Iowa, 8-1. The Cyclones then lost to Gustavus Adolphus before winning their next five out of six matches, sporting a 6-3 overall mark going into Big Eight matches.

In the middle of the Big Eight season, the Cyclones beat Northwest

Missouri State, 8-1, and Central 9-0.

The Cyclones ended the regular season by blasting Grinnell, 9-0.

Going into the Big Eight championships on May 6, Iowa State was in a tie for seventh with Kansas State. Coach Bill Landin said that if the Cyclones could finish sixth in the meet, they could salvage the season.

The team dropped to an eighth place finish but the team's season ended on a high note when they pulled out wins in all the final round doubles competition.

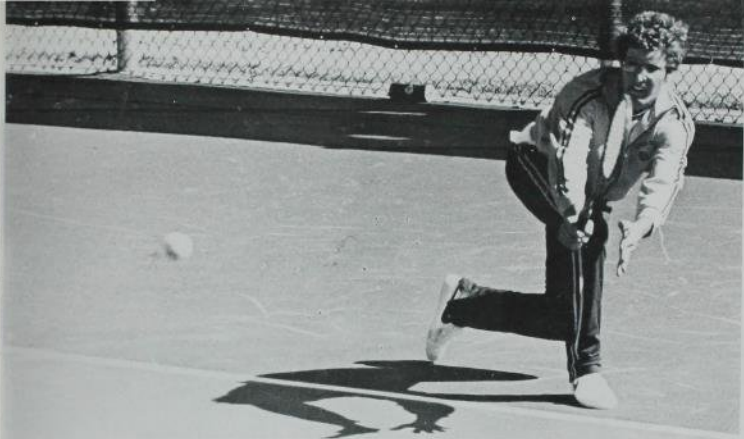

The tennis team for 1981 will lose only two players to graduation. Tom Lennox, who compiled a 12-14 record during the year, has a year of eligibility left and the squad also returns veterans Dave Talbott, Brian Pung, Dave Eberhardy and Mark Paulson.

The squad will also have Brian Martin and Joe Nieman back for next year.

Both players were expected to be among the top singles players on the team, but were lost to surgery and redshirted. Each will have two years of eligibility remaining.

Harriers eye fourth straight AIAW crown

The Cyclone runners line up next to rivals from the University of Iowa. Photo by Scott.

The Iowa State women's cross country team had suffered through an up and down season going into the AIAW Region 6 Championships on October 31.

The squad, which had dominated the championships the last three years, began the season with two fourth place finishes in invitationals.

The team was fourth out of seven teams in the Drake Invitational on September 20. The top finisher for ISU was Wren Schafer, who came in fourth with a time of 20:01. A week later, the Cyclones again had a fourth place finish, this time in the TFA/USA Midwest Collegiate Championships in Kenosha, Wisconsin. Iowa State's two-time All-American Debbie Vetter was fourth in the meet with a time of 17:36.

The squad was back on the winning track at their next two invitationals.

At the Iowa State Invitational on October 3, the Cyclones were first out of a seven team field as Debbie Vetter captured first place with a run of 17:29.13. Schafer was fifth and Diane Vetter seventh. Freshman Francine Sandival contributed an eighth place for the Cyclones.

The runners continued their winning ways by capturing the title at the Southern Illinois Invitational on October 11. Debbie Vetter again was first in the field with a time of 18:09. Schafer grabbed second place at 18:41.

The outlook going into the Big Eight meet on October 25 was good, although the Cyclones faced very stiff competition. The runners were going after their sixth straight Big Eight title.

The title was not to be, though, as the Cyclones finished fifth in the meet. Debbie Vetter was seventh and Schafer tenth for ISU.

The squad entered the AIAW Region 6 Championships going after their fourth straight title. Debbie Vetter, who missed the 1979 meet with a thigh injury, was back for the Cyclones. Last year's champion, ISU's Christine McMeekin, was to miss the meet with an injury to her Achilles tendon.

Harriers prove impressive early on

The men's cross country team put together a series of impressive performances going into the Big Eight meet November 1 at Columbia, Missouri.

The squad opened the season October 9 with the Iowa State Open at Veenker Golf Course. No team totals were kept, but the Cyclone's Bob Verbeck had the best time in the field at 24:25.6. Iowa State's Gene McGivern and Richard Kaitany were fifth and ninth respectively.

The team next traveled to Lincoln, Nebraska for a double dual meet with Nebraska and Kansas State. The Cyclones came out on top, 15-42 over Nebraska and 19-39 over the Wildcats. The team claimed five out of the top seven spots, with Kaitany and McGivern coming in 1-2.

After Verbeck and Kaitany grabbed another 1-2 finish in a Cyclone win in the Big Four meet, the team traveled to Columbia, Missouri for a triangular meet with Missouri and Kansas State.

Iowa State was again victorious, this time with Kaitany and McGivern garnering yet another 1-2 finish.

The Cyclones ran into some tough competition at their next meet. They journeyed to Madison, Wisconsin to compete in the Wisconsin Invitational.

Host school Wisconsin was the Big Ten favorite and the field also included Arkansas and Penn State, who Cyclone coach Bill Bergan said were likely to finish second and third in the NCAA.

The runners got the best of Wisconsin but fell to Arkansas and Penn State, despite excellent performances by four Cyclones.

Kaitany placed third and Verbeck was 11th in the 8,000 meter race. Both of their times in the meet bettered the school record. McGivern and Jim Ijams registered personal bests.

After the Big Eight meet, the NCAA District V meet was held November 15 at Veenker Golf Course and the NCAA meet was November 24 in Wichita, Kansas.

Cyclones spike way to three firsts

With all eight letterwinners from last year returning from the winningest volleyball team in Iowa State history, Coach Sharon Hitsman had reason to be optimistic before the 1980 season.

And her optimism was well-founded as the Cyclones rolled to a 31-14-1 record in matches played up to the Big Eight championships on October 24-25.

In addition to the overall won-lost record, the team gathered three firsts and placed fourth or better in three other tournaments.

The Cyclones garnered a first-place finish in the Kansas State Invitational in Manhattan, Kansas on September 12-13. Then on September 19-20, the team traveled to Tulsa, Oklahoma, where they left with a first-place finish in the Oral Roberts Invitational. The Cyclone spikers again finished on top in the Missouri-St. Louis Invitational on October 3-4.

The team also snared a second place finish in the Windy City Invitational on October 10-11 and a fourth at the Minnesota Invitational on October 17-18.

Going into the Big Eight championships at Lincoln, Nebraska, Hitsman said, "I know the players are going into this tournament thinking they can win it." The Cyclones had to face Oklahoma on the opening game, who they had lost to earlier in the year. The team also had not experienced much success playing at or against Nebraska.

These factors were in evidence as the team came away from Lincoln with a third place finish.

The popularity of Taekwondo club is still growing

The Iowa State University Taekwondo Club is one of the oldest and most established sports clubs to be funded by the Government of the Student Body. Since the club's inception in 1968, an estimated two thousand students and Ames community members have received training in Taekwondo (TKD).

Translated literally, taekwondo means "foot-hand way". Sometimes called "Korean Karate," TKD differs from other styles of martial arts in the emphasis of kicking techniques.

Originating in Korea, the practice of TKD has spread throughout the world, becoming one of the most popular disciplines of the martial arts. There are an estimated two million people practicing TKD in the world.

The ISU TKD club started out with ten members. In 1969, the club became part of Kim's Academy of Taekwondo, Inc., of Des Moines. Under the instruction of Mr. In Mok Kim, an eighth degree black belt, the club grew to an active membership of two hundred people in 1974.

Today, the club has forty to sixty members working out on any given night.

One of the reasons for the continued popularity of the ISU TKD club is the emphasis on courtesy, discipline and control of the mind and body. TKD students are taught to discipline their minds through the rigorous self-discipline of their bodies.

Because of the widespread emphasis on kicking, TKD is one of the most effective martial arts. On any person, the leg muscles are more developed than the arm muscles. When a person is trained to strike with his foot, he brings into play his strongest set of muscles. This allows a person to defend himself with powerful techniques that would disable a much larger opponent.

With regular practice, most people can earn their black belts in 18 months to two years. Today, the TKD club has 63 members with black belts, out of which four are women.

Members of the club regularly compete in TKD tournaments throughout the United States. In 1975, two members, Bill Luke and Tony Cotter, were chosen to fight on the American International Taekwondo Club. They competed in Montreal, Canada and went on to defend their title in Hamburg, Germany. Other members have competed very successfully, and the club produced a national champion in 1979, when Richard Dolesky won the lightweight division at nationals held in Topeka, Kansas.

Wrestling Coach Harold Nichols had reason to enter his 28th season at Iowa State highly optimistic. His squad returned virtually everyone from the previous year, including two NCAA runners-up and two other fourth-place finishers.

The 1979-80 squad grabbed a third-place NCAA finish, which was a surprise to some since the team had no seniors and a large number of underclassmen. That squad included NCAA runners-up Perry Hummel and Dave Allen, and fourth-place finishers Tom Pickard and Mike Mann, all of whom returned for the 1980-81 season.

And the Cyclones got off to a good start, knocking off five straight dual meet opponents while getting tuned up for the semi-annual clash with Iowa.

Going into the January 9th meet with the Hawkeyes, many people didn't give the Cyclones a fighting chance. But the over 13,000 fans who jammed Hilton Coliseum saw a different story.

The grapplers from Iowa had rolled over nine straight dual-meet opponents, and came to Ames looking for number ten. After nine matches, the Cyclones had a 19-14 lead going into the heavyweight match between ISU's Dave Osenbaugh and Iowa's Lou Banach.

Osenbaugh delighted the ISU fans when, with a minute left in the match and trailing 9-0, he reversed Banach and put him on his back for a pin and a 25-14 Cyclone win. Nichols later termed it the most satisfying win of his career.

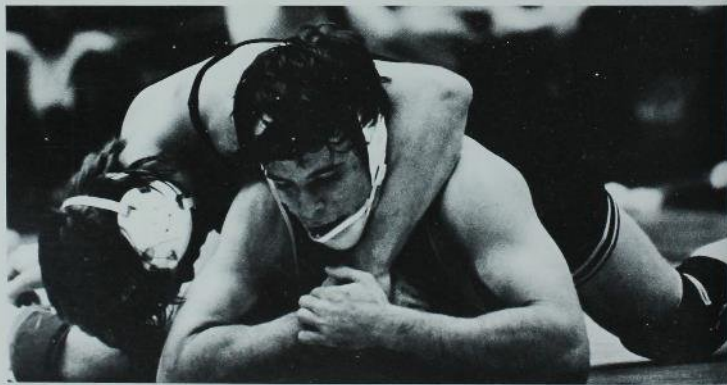

The ISU fans basked in the victory and the Iowa faithful waited in anticipation for the February 21st rematch, the last match of the year for the Cyclones. After that match, the Cyclones traveled to Stillwater, Oklahoma for the Big Eight meet February 27-28. Then Princeton, New Jersey was the sight of the NCAA championships March 12-14.

ISU greets new coach Deb Oing

New Iowa State women's basketball coach Deb Oing, who replaced Lynn Wheeler after Wheeler's 6-19 season in 1979-80, went into her first season as the Cyclone mentor wanting to stress the positive and forget the past.

Oing, a collegiate All-American at Indiana, came to Ames from Lake Forest College in Illinois, where she coached the team to a 27-8 record in two seasons. She said she felt positive about the 1980-81 team, and hoped the team would put the dismal previous season behind them.

And Oing had good reason to be optimistic. The netters returned nine lettermen, including 1979-80's leading scorer Carol Schleis, who averaged 10.2 points a game. The squad also returned guard Tracy Eckert, who led the team in steals with 51 and assists with 122.

One letterman the team missed during the season was London Reile, who was the leading rebounder with 8.5 caroms a game. Reile had to quit the squad due to her academic commitment to her major, veterinary medicine.

In games played up until the Big Eight Championship on January 15-17, the Cyclone women had amassed a 4-8 record. Included in the four wins were a December 4th victory over a very good Drake team, and wins over William Penn, Creighton and Arkansas. The squad had yet to win on the road, being 0-7 in away games, and 0-1 on a neutral court.

In those 12 games, the Cyclone netters had been paced by guard Jolene Leseman and forward Jane McConnell, who were averaging 12.3 and 10.3 points, respectively.

Forward Gileen Gleason was the leading rebounder, grabbing 8.2 rebounds a game. Tracy Eckert picked up where she left off in 1979-80, leading the team in assists with 37 and steals with 28.

After the Big Eight championships, the squad faced a rematch with Iowa on January 21st. The Cyclone women were seeking revenge for a 67-66 setback on December 2nd in Iowa City. Their final regular-season game was February 26th with South Dakota.

The AIAW Region 6 Championships were slated for March 12-14 in Minneapolis. The AIAW Nationals were held March 26-28 in Eugene, Oregon.

Iowa State Cage fans welcome the "Orrera"

Everyone's gaze is fixed on the elusive basketball as ISU's Ron Favenschek and several Creighton BlueJays fight for it. Photo by Gros.

After Lynn Nance resigned part way through the 1979-80 basketball season, Cyclone followers waited anxiously for word of who would become Iowa State's 14th basketball coach.

Several names were tossed around between February 28th, the date of the Cyclones' last game of the season and March 25th. Then on March 25th, the whole basketball world was stunned and ISU followers were elated with the announcement that the new Cyclone mentor would be Johnny Orr.

Orr, who was one of the most successful coaches in Big Ten history, came to Iowa State with 248 victories and a 63% winning percentage as a head coach. At Michigan, where he had spent the last 12 years, his teams were second in the Big Ten three times and were first twice. Orr's 1976-77 team was ranked first in the country for part of the season.

Iowa State fans looked forward to run-and-gun, high-scoring, winning basketball. But Orr was less than optimistic about his inherent squad's strengths.

Before the season started, Orr claimed that his goal for the season was "to win one game". That didn't take long as the Cyclones won their home opener against Drake on December 4th, before almost 14,000 screaming fans.

The Drake game was the second game in what was to be a wild pre-conference schedule. After being blownout at Iowa on December 20th, the squad stood at 2-4.

But, starting with surprising win over a good Alabama-Birmingham team, the Cyclones netters ran off a string of five straight wins, including wins over East Carolina and Fairfield that gave them the championship of the Elm City Classic.

Heading into the Big Eight opener on January 14th with Kansas, the Cyclones had rang up a 7-4 record.

Orr not your run-of-the-mill coach

The arrival of the colorful Johnny Orr as Iowa State's new basketball coach brought forth from Iowans first a gasp of shock, then a smile of pleasure as the fast-quipping mentor began his tenure.

Often the highlight of a talk with Orr is not his dissertations on the fine points of roundball, but his amusing habit of tossing funny lines around the room.

On coming to ISU, Orr commented that, at Michigan, "I was the dean of the Big Ten coaches. Dean. That's old . . . Now, I'm the rookie in the Big Eight. Rookie. I feel 20 years younger already."

At Michigan, where Orr compiled a record of 209-113 and two Big Ten championships, his teams were known for an up-tempo offense and an aggressive defense. But the situation might be a bit different at ISU, where Orr inherited a group of players who were considered to be less than speed-burners.

Another thing, besides the lack of speed, Orr had to get used to was having a player on his squad the size of Ron Falenschek. Orr admitted that he had never had a player the size of Falenschek on one of his teams.

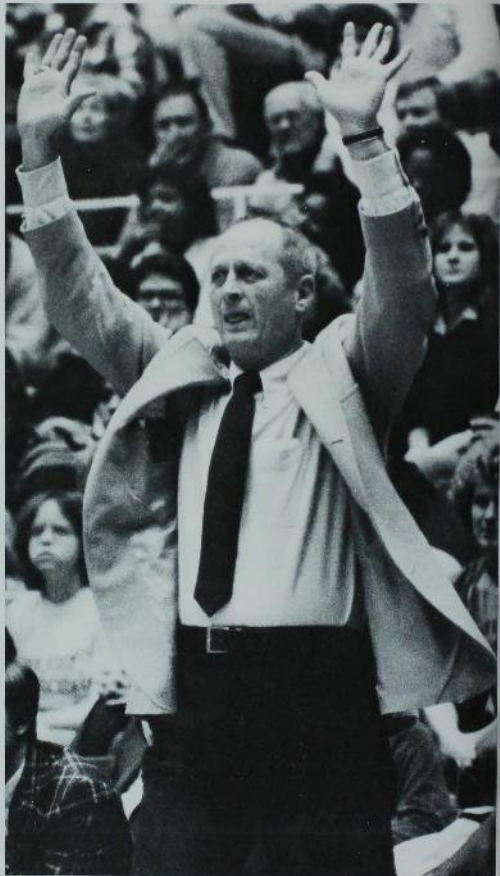

"I have never been one to rely on size," Orr said. "We recruit player and go after fellows with good jumping ability. Quickness is the asset we will look for in recruits."

Although Orr wasn't promising any miracles, he did say "I don't know how long it will take, but we will get the job done."

Orr also expressed a desire to go to a post-season tournament. And the current trend the way it is, that idea doesn't seem too remote a possibility.

"The way the NCAA is going, in a couple of years they will have 350 teams in the tournament and we will have to be one of them."

Cyclone swimmers coming off best year ever

Coming off the most successful women's swimming season in Iowa State history, high hopes were running rampant for the 1980-81 season to be as good or better.

The 1979-80 squad swam its way to a 6-1 dual meet record, a second-place Big Eight finish and a school-record 12 qualifiers to the national AIAW meet.

Although the '79-80 squad worked its way to great success, the 1980-81 squad appeared to be in a different situation. The new squad was made up of 19 freshmen and sophomores, and no seniors, and the 1980-81 schedule featured some more high-caliber competition than the swimmers had seen the year before.

But head coach Ramsey Van Horn said that the competition will help his team to improve, and that his squad will be "meet tough" by the time the Big Eight meet rolls around.

In action up to and including the January 10th meet with Northwestern and Illinois-Chicago Circle, the swimmers had marked up a 3-0 dual meet record. Included in that record was a 75-60 conquest of Iowa, and 81-50 bettering of Northwestern and a 118-13 blasting of Illinois-Chicago Circle.

The Big Eight championships were held February 26-28 at Lawrence, Kansas and the AIAW Nationals were March 18-21 at Columbia, South Carolina.

Swimmers look for good year

The return of one All-American and several other experienced swimmers gave the 1980-81 men's swimming squad a look of promise.

Cyclone Jim Barron became Iowa State's first swimming All-American since 1973 with his twelfth-place finish in the 220 yard breaststroke at the NCAA championships. Barron finished in a time of 2:03.87, which broke Barron's own school record.

In addition to Barron, the squad returned three members of the 400-yard medley relay team, which qualified for the NCAA championships. Gary DeRoos (backstroke), Jim Barron (breaststroke), and Jeff Henry (freestyle) returned from the relay team that coach Bob Groseth feels can score in the 1980-81 national meet.

Two other teams Groseth felt confident about making it to the championships were the 800-yard freestyle and the 400-yard freestyle.

The squad also welcomed back Rolf Meyer, who grabbed a second in the 500-yard freestyle and a first in the 1560-yard freestyle at the Big Eight championships in 1980. Jim Barron grabbed two firsts and a second in that meet also.

With current members of the squad holding all but four of the Iowa State swimming records, Cyclone fans looked forward to a big year from the ISU tankers.

The team's early season consisted of three straight third-place finishes in the Big Ten Relays, Illinois Invitational, and the Illinois State Relays. The swimmers' dual meet season started January 23rd at Minnesota.

The Big Eight championships were held March 5-7 and the NCAA championships were March 26-28.

Youth dominates women's team

Youth was the key word for the Iowa State women's gymnastics team in the 1980-81 season.

Second-year coach Donna Kramer welcomed five freshmen to her eight woman squad, including all-around performers Beth Grannan, Carnie Stornello and Laura Trojan. Joining these frosh in the all-around were sophomore Kris Ehm, junior Sue Couve and senior Meg Davis. Kathy Franzen, a freshman specialist on the beam and the bars, and freshman beam and floor specialist Laura Zaruba rounded out the squad.

The return of Ehm, Couve, and Davis, along with the hopeful maturing of the five talented freshmen, gave Cyclone gymnastics' followers reason to be optimistic.

In their opening competitive meet of the season against Missouri on December 7th, the gymnasts had to go without Kris Ehm, who was out with a wrist injury. Without Ehm, and with the squad's freshmen suffering from the first-meet jitters, the Cyclones dropped a 138-117.05 decision to the Tigers.

The squad faced a tough schedule the rest of the season, including home meets against highly regarded New Mexico and Brigham Young.

The Big Eight championships were held February 20-21 at Stillwater, Oklahoma, where the Cyclones hoped to improve on their previous year's 5th place finish. Iowa State had the honor of hosting the AIAW Region 6 championships March 27th and 28th. ISU finished fourth in the championship the year before.

The 1980-81 men's gymnastics team entered the season in quest of a fourth national championship. But there were a few teams standing in their way, most notably Nebraska.

The Cornhuskers, who grabbed both the Big Eight and NCAA championships away from Iowa State, returned almost everyone from their championship squad. In addition to Nebraska, Oklahoma and UCLA both fielded very tough squads.

But the Iowa State Cyclones were by no means hurting. The squad returned Ron Galimore, a national champion in vaulting and a member of the U.S. Olympic team. The gymnasts also had all-around expert Tom Hardin back, as well as Doug and Dave Smidl, Mike Lyons, who snatched a second-place finish in the NCAA championships, and Yaso Kuniyoshi, a Big Eight high bar champion.

And if the early going is any indication, it looked like the Cyclones were in pretty good form. In meets up until the Oklahoma meet on January 16th, the squad was 3-0.

The first opponent, Wisconsin, fell to ISU by a 267.85 to 242.10 score. Then the Cyclones blasted Wisconsin-Oshkosh, 267.85 to 232.40.

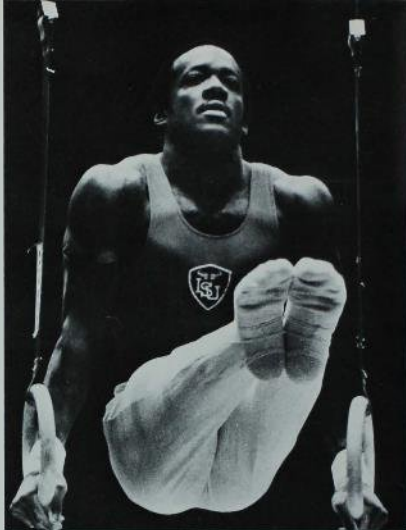

The next meet was an encounter with the powerful Japanese Collegiate Nationals. Despite scoring an impressive 278.45 points, the Cyclones fell to the superb Japanese by 278.45 to 282.25. Iowa State returned to its winning form the next week by edging Northern Illinois, 274.30 to 263.70.

Early indications showed that the 1981 Big Eight and NCAA Championships would be a dogfight between defending champs Nebraska and the Cyclones. The Cornhuskers return the NCAA's champion all-arounder, Jim Hartung, and Iowa State countered with the third-place finisher, Ron Galimore. Galimore's score of 57.175 set a school record.

Hopefully, the ISU squad will remain healthy, and the chances of bringing home an NCAA championship looked good.

Cricket Club thrives at ISU

Cricket anyone?

If you're planning to learn how to play the game of cricket, you'd better be prepared to learn a lot of rules. Although the sport resembles baseball, it is very much different from our national pastime.

At ISU, this British version of baseball is played by the Iowa State Cricket Club. The Cricket Club at ISU started in the early 1970's and presently contains about 25 members, according to club vice-president Rafaat Rahmani. The club practices next to the Design Center, and in 1981-82, Rahmani said, planned to expand its travel schedule in order to play a wider variety of teams. Presently, he said, the team plays mostly schools in the Midwest.

One thing prospective cricket-learners had best be prepared for is some of the large differences between it and baseball.

In cricket, games last up to five days, and their can be 300 or more runs scored in one game, with one batter often getting 50 runs himself.

In cricket, these people are referred to as the wicketkeeper and the batsman. Photo by Kocher.

Male Athlete of the Year

Ron Galimore

Cyclone gymnast Ron Galimore gave Iowa State gymnastics fans many things to be proud of in his two-year career here.

First of all, in his junior year, Galimore captured the NCAA championship in the vault and finished second in the all-around. He was named an All-American in these events, as well as the floor exercise.

Iowa State finished second as a team.

Then, in the summer of 1980, Galimore made the USA Olympic team, becoming the first of Ed Gagnier's gymnasts to do so. Although the United States didn't compete, Galimore impressed the nation in a six-city tour that the gymnasts took.

After the dust had cleared from the 1980 season, Galimore emerged as a holder of seven Iowa State records.

Included in those records was the highest mark for an optional vault - a perfect 10.00 that Galimore received at the Midwest championships.

Female Athlete of the Year

Tammy Rueckert

The Iowa State softball team is in the midst of one of its most successful periods in recent history. Part of the reason for that success can be attributed to pitcher Tammy Rueckert.

Rueckert, an all-Big Eight selection her sophomore and junior years, holds almost all of the Iowa State season and career pitching records. Included in those records were career marks for strike outs (214), games won (32) and appearances (58). Rueckert also held the season marks for strike outs (107), games won (17) and game appearances (31).

The Columbus Junction native's record stood at 32-17, and since Rueckert joined the Cyclone squad as a freshman, the softball team has compiled a record of 80-43.

With the spring season yet to play, the chances looked good both for Rueckert and the softball team to add on to their already impressive records.

Coach of the Year Ed Gagnier

Not many gymnastics' coaches in history have known as much success as Iowa State's Ed Gagnier.

Gagnier has been bestowed with many coaching honors, including National Coach of the Year three times. Since coming to Ames in 1961, his Iowa State teams have compiled a winning percentage of 87%. Six times his teams finished the season with perfect records.

The Cyclones' of Gagnier have captured 10 Big Eight titles, including seven in a row at one time. In NCAA competition, Iowa State has come home with three firsts and finished second in additional three times.

Gagnier has coached individual gymnasts to 15 NCAA titles, 69 Big Eight crowns and All-American honors 30 times.

In addition to all this, Gagnier is very active in promoting gymnastics. He has served on the Olympic Gymnastics Committee and the NCAA Gymnastics Rules Committee.

Last year, he was elected to a second term as president of the National Association of College Gymnastics Coaches.

Room 216: What lies beyond?

Want to start your own club? All it takes is a faculty advisor and a visit to room 216 in Beardshear Hall. The personnel of the Campus Organizations Office will be glad to help you fill out the required forms.

According to David Popelka, an accountant for the office, over 800 organizations are currently registered with Campus Organizations, whose main purpose is to serve as a bank for clubs and special programs.

The organization's office provides many services to clubs in exchange or a small percentage of the groups' incomes. These services include providing business forms, cash vouchers and purchase orders. All dorm houses deposit collected dues with the Beardshear office. The financial records of each registered group are then audited each summer. Some class fees and special events, including VEISHEA, are handled through the service. According to Popelka, total deposits for last year totaled over 7 million dollars.

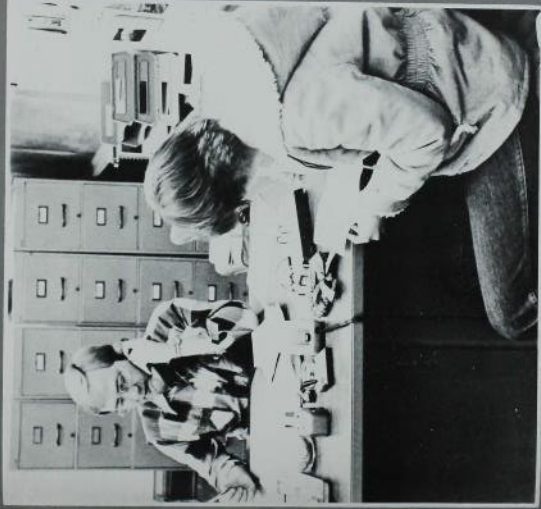

The office publishes an annual report of all financial transactions made, which is available for viewing in the Campus Organizations Office.

Jim Stone: A unique specialty

What do pancakes shaped like Sesame Street characters and ISU have in common? Jim Stone!

Jim owns the Grove Cafe in downtown Ames. On Saturday mornings his specialty is pancakes shaped like Big Bird, Oscar the Grouch, and ISU's favorite Cy, to name a few. And no matter what day of the week, Jim is an avid Cyclone supporter.

Jim and his wife, Gaye, bought the Grove about six years ago. Most of the customers are regulars, now. And the place has that family feeling, characteristic of many small town cafes.

"It's like one big happy family in here, especially on Saturday mornings," Gaye said.

Jim began making the character shaped pancakes four years ago when his son Aaron asked for a pancake that looked like Big Bird. Jim filled a mustard squirter with pancake batter (which is his own secret recipe) and outlined Big Bird on the griddle. Then he filled in the outline with more pancake batter.

The idea caught on with other kids, and thus began one of Jim Stone's many specialties.

Another specialty unique to the Grove Cafe is the coffee.

"We're known around as having the best coffee in town. Some people will drive down from campus just to have a cup," Jim said.

Gaye explained, "We grind whole continental coffee beans right here in the restaurant. Our coffee is so good because it has that fresh ground taste to it."

Marion Luike, B4, is one of the Grove regulars. He walks down every morning at about 10:30 for a cup of Jim's famous coffee.

Patrons of the Grove Cafe comprise a rather diverse group. Many of them are blue-collar workers; some of them are downtown Ames merchants and one of them is the mayor. Ames Mayor Fr. Paul Goodland holds office hours in the Grove two or three mornings a week.

It's not uncommon to see people lined up on the side walk outside the Grove and on Saturday's it's unusual to see a vacant seat.

Jim said, "It's alot of work and we get pretty busy in here sometimes, but I wouldn't want to give it up. It isn't worth working for anyone but yourself."

Once in while when it does get super busy, customers will pitch in and bus tables.

When Jim isn't at the cafe he does a little painting. What does he paint?

He paints tire covers supporting his favorite team, the ISU Cyclones. Not bad for a guy who spent two and a half years at Drake.

Jim does all the artwork on the covers without a screen. That way no two are alike.

"Jim likes the personal touch of doing each one, instead of using a silk screen to mass produce the covers," Gaye commented.

Gaye and Jim have passed some of their Cyclone enthusiasm onto their son Aaron. In fact Aaron was chosen as the first little Cy.

And that's what pancakes shaped like Sesame Street characters and ISU have in common.

The bomb: What makes it tick?

Actual planning for the Bomb begins when the Bomb Publications Board selects an editor from many applications which have been submitted.

After being selected, the editor begins work on a budget for the book: for pictures, materials, etc. Specifications for bids are sent to various publishing and photography companies and the companies submitting specs closest to the Bomb's needs are selected.

The editor is responsible for selecting and hiring a staff of section editors, reporters, writers, etc.

Once the staff is selected, an entire page plan called a "ladder" is plotted. The ladder, or outline, represents every page of the Bomb, what will appear on those pages and even which pages will have color.

Deadlines are set which will assure a steady flow of work to the publishing company. Because delays are costly to the productions of the Bomb, it's very important that the editor, section editors, and reporters, as well as photographers, all cooperate in getting the work done on time.

Now the section editors have their work cut out for them. Assignments are handed out to reporters and photographers.

As each report is returned to the office, it is copy-edited, or proofed, for mistakes. If the story is too long, the copy editor deletes any unnecessary words, or paragraphs, to make sure it fits into the layout. This process of reporting, copy-editing and layout is repeated through the end of the year, hopefully without too many delays.

Index Co Editor Deb Ulland shuffles the name cards in the long process of compiling the index, while others in the office keep busy with typing and proofing tasks. Photos by Groe

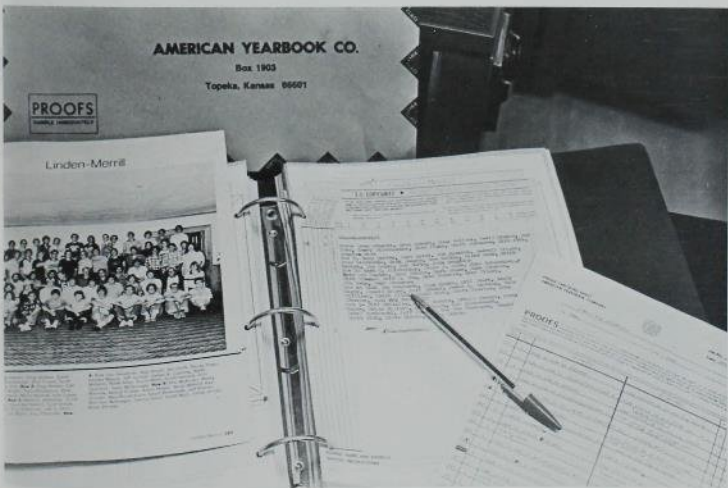

At deadline intervals the editor sends layouts, pictures and reports to the publishing company. At the company, they are arranged in the same way they will appear after printing. When the company has the pages pasted together, the "proofs" are returned to the Bomb for further corrections.

The checked "proofs" are returned to the publisher, who completes the final processing of the corrected pages.

Various promotions are conducted throughout the year including letters and sales at booths around campus.

The last deadline, usually sometime in February, means that the frustrations, anxieties, and joys all come to an end, culminating it all with a festive party and often a few tears. The Bomb is finished, but it remains a collection of hard work, cooperation, and memories to be enjoyed for many years.

Vaughn scores another goal

My main goal is to help people and enjoy life to the fullest."

These are the words of Tommy Vaughn. His name stirs a diversity of memories and feeling to different people.

If you're a black living in the ghettos of Troy, Ohio, Tom Vaughn symbolizes "one of the ones who made it."

If you're a Detroit Lion fan, you remember Vaughn as number 48.

If you're an ISU Cyclone fan you may remember Tommy as an All-American football star, who did a great job for ISU. You might even recall him as the offensive backfield coach on Earle Bruce's staff.

But what if you're none of those. What if you are a student who needs financial aid, or a volunteer for the American Cancer Society. Then you may only know Tom Vaughn as someone who likes people.

ISU recruited Tom to play football in 1962. While at ISU he attained such honors as All Big Eight, 1965 Athlete of the Year and Academic All-American. But Vaughn says his proudest accomplishment was graduation from Iowa State University.

"In my day a football player was 80% bronze and 20% brains. Most of them went to school four years, but not too many of them graduated. I did!" Vaughn said.

Vaughn was then drafted to Detroit where he played for seven years as a defensive back.

"I miss pro football. People treated you like a man. I quit because I could no longer give a whole 100%, and I don't do anything unless I can give 100%," Vaughn said.

Vaughn said one of the best attributes he aquired from pro football was the way he relates to people.

When I was living in Detroit I learned how to relate to the very wealthy, but I still knew where my roots were. I know where I came from and don't want to forget," he said.

Today, Tom Vaughn is assistant to the president of Union Story Bank and Trust in downtown Ames. He also handles all the Iowa Guaranteed Student Loans.

"When I left Ames in 1965, I vowed never to come back. But Ames has changed: The world has changed. I like the common easy-going folk that say "Good Morning to ya, I like people. I like Ames."

The only similarity is that they are not at home

The 1510 foreign students at Iowa State come from all parts of the world and are often seen by many American students as very different from themselves. These differences bring about a natural curiosity of other cultures. Although American ISU students, (who are predominantly from Iowa,) have many questions of these foreigners and vice versa, fear, hesitancy, embarrassment, and in a few cases, prejudices, get in the way. This seems unfortunate since cross-cultural education is invaluable in becoming aware of the world.

One of the most commonly asked questions seems to be, "Why did the foreigner choose Iowa State for his education?" Dennis Peterson, Assistant Director for the Office of International Educational Services, said "choices are made because of information from foreign alumni, because their sponsors told them to come here, through the world wide reputation of ISU in some fields, and some by happen-chance." However, the process of coming to Iowa State isn't as simple as just choosing it. The application procedure is difficult and time consuming, including two English exams, recommendations, academic records, and an essay of their educational objectives. The process takes so long that 80% of the students arrive without a confirmed housing contract, therefore adding to the anxiety of coming to a new country and new school.

Following this application process, the foreign student must set out on the long quest of making friends, becoming acquainted with American life and culture, and with the basic Iowa State surroundings. Many students from the U.S. who have worked, traveled, or studied abroad often help out in this transition period. Small tasks to American students, such as banking, shopping for groceries, and finding transportation may seem monumental to the foreigner.

Furthermore, misconceptions exist about both foreign and U.S. cultures which tends to cause barriers in communication. One of these myths is that all foreigners are supported by their respective governments and by the U.S. government. This is not true in many cases. Only 50% of the foreign students are supported by public institutions, including all scholarships, and of this amount, only 3% come from the United States. Therefore, the remaining foreigners must go to friends and family for financial help to offset the average $7000 a year cost of living in Ames.

Hopefully, the myths will be overlooked by curiosity, and fears and prejudices will be conquered by questions, in order to someday unite the campus with a cross-cultural learning of the whole world, with the realization that we are all "not at home."

We're breaking down the barriers

Every Thursday evening at 5:30 a van load of students depart from the east side of the Memorial Union. They drive for just over an hour to get to the Mesquakie Indian Settlement near Tama, Iowa.

They go there to give and to take, to teach and to learn.

This group of about 20 Iowa State students are involved in an undertaking known as the Mesquakie Tutoring Project.

The Project, started on behalf of the United Native American Student Association (UNASA), is moving through its seventh year of existence.

For the last five years the project has been run by Helen Schuster of Sociology and Anthropology, who says that the tutoring has had a "dramatic effect" upon the education of the Mesquakie children.

According to Schuster, the high school graduation rate for the Mesquakie population has undergone a recent change. The graduation rate, once below the national average of 75%, has risen to 90% since the project was started.

Schuster said that the project is really "two fold. One one hand, we give a service to and present an opportunity to the Indians, and on the other hand, we are able to give some ISU students experience in interacting cross-culturally."

An interesting thing that Schuster noted about the students participating as tutors is that their backgrounds and majors cover the whole spectrum. Schuster also said that hopefully the children's interest in coming to Iowa State to pursue a higher education will be enhanced.

Currently, there are plans for the high school juniors and seniors to come to Iowa State for an athletic event or a concert and possible sit on a class or two. There will also be a tour during VEISHEA.

The Mesquakie Tutoring Project is funded by the general student body through the GSB.

"We're going to break down the barriers," Schuster said.

Eat, drink, and be merry in Ames

What's the oldest ice cream store in Ames? Home of the extra-thick malt? Glass-bottled milk? Oreo crunch, cinnamon honey crisp and peanutbutter fudge ice cream?

It's Boyd'd!

Boyd's buy all their milk from Boone and Story County farmers and bottle it at their plant in Boone. Mrs. Boyd said there is perhaps one other business in Iowa that still sells bottled milk. The bottles are hard to get because they are made only by one company once a year.

Boyd's is perhaps most famous for its extra-thick shakes and malts. Mrs. Boyd said, "Many of our competitors stopped making extra-thick malts because there wasn't enough profit in them. We think it's special so we continue to make it."

"We use only real fruit, not artificial in our ice cream," Mrs. Boyd said.

She said the Campustown store is probably the busiest, especially during dead and final weeks.

Another busy Campustown establishment during dead and finals week is Minsky's.

When Minsky's is mentioned, one automatically thinks of extra-special pizza and daiquiris," a customer said.

In 1975 Minsky's began offering a Wednesday night daiquiri special.

While strawberry is the most requested, pineapple and peach are also offered. Today's price is $1.25.

A new Minsky's opened this fall on Lincoln Way, taking the place of a smaller Minsky's on Main Street. The manager said the newer Minsky's has pizza, a lounge and a quieter atmosphere than the older stores.

While pizza and spaghetti maybe some what related, Minsky's and Lucullan's are at opposite ends of the spectrum.

Our modern decor is very appealing to students, especially design students," said Terry Lowman, part owner and manager.

Lucullan's makes all of its food on the premises, including noodles for use in the gourmet Italian menu selection. Homemade breads and soups are also a special feature of the salad bar.

"Thirty percent of our customers request salad bar only," said Lowman. "We have everything from meat to homemade salad dressing displayed on a mirrored bar."

A salad bar and gourmet Italian entrees are not the speciality of Hickory Park.

Patrons visit this sought-after establishment for its unusual combination of barbecued sandwiches and deluxe ice cream sundaes.

Sundaes made with Milky Way bars, apple crisp and fruit toppings are among favorites.

Hickory Park will soon move from its present location 604 E. Lincoln Way to South 16th Street, the former home of Tony's Little Italy.

What's up when you don't know what you want to do or where you want to go? How about Wutzunder!

Wutzunder is what's under Felix and Oscars on Lincoln Way and Hyland. Atmosphere is the speciality unique to Wutzunder.

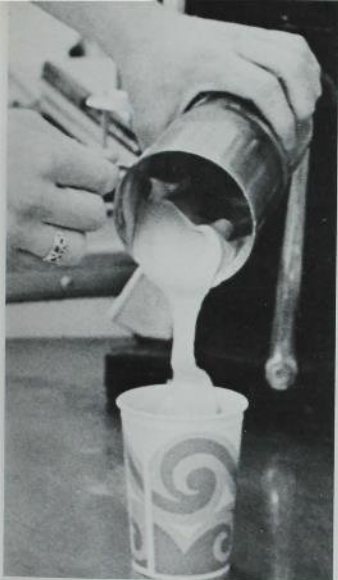

Cindy Laydu, manager of Wutzunder describes the bar as a "unique place with the right character and quality to please people of all ages."

"Wutzunder is unique because you can bring a date here for a mellow evening. Or you can come here with your friends. You can even bring your parents here and not worry about offending them," Cindy said.

Wutzunder: A place for people to enjoy!

It affected all of our lives

Everyone has entertained guests in their home at one time or another, but how many people have entertained 325,000 people in three days.

Bill and Phyllis New, Ernie and Sylvia Otto, Duane and Geraldine Gerlach and Willard and Lois Gerlach have all shared that experience. They were the joint hosts of the Wallace Farmer 1980 Farm Progress Show held in Nevada.

Wallace Farmer contacted Bill New in December of 1978 about holding the show on his land. One of the major criteria for the show is 1000 continuous acres of land. Bill contacted his neighbors. All of them agreed and thus began the work and planning for the 1980 Farm Progress Show.

"It affected all of our lives. We had to be pretty much on call at all times, which never leaving the farm for any extended period of time. The whole show seems a lot bigger when it's on your farm," New said.

One of the main things the show changed was the planting preparation.

"We normally plant early, medium and late variety; this year we were working with three different seed companies and we planted several different varieties from each company. You'd just get started and maybe have 20 acres planted and then it was time to change again. It was a tremendous amount of work," said Willard Gerlach.

Other preparations for the show included remodeling, painting, and building a house. Ron Oelmann, Otto's son-in-law, and his wife Nancy built a new house for the show.

"The show was a mad, fascinating experience. We were beginning worry if the house was going to get done in time. In fact the first morning of the show they were just putting on the finishing touches," Nancy said.

The host farmers worked 22 months to put the show together.

"One thing I noticed was that the people were just great to work with. And everyone was so friendly. It was a real pleasure," Willard said.

"Yes, it was a great experience, but once was enough," said Bill New.

Nothing has so profoundly affected our vision of the world as the development of photography. Photography has the ability to capture moments of our lives and preserve them for us. By reflecting on captured moments, we grow as people, forever getting closer to our own personal dawning of awareness.

*The next section of this book is a slight deviation from typical yearbook format. The photography staff of Bomb '81 have chosen topics of significance and presented them as photo essays. Each photographer was given the opportunity to investigate a view of people, things or activities and present it in their own way. Each essay is unique. Each essay is visually significant. Just another student . . .

Ten years ago Kim Greenland was involved in an accident on his family's farm near Grand River. While feeding livestock, his arm was caught in the auger of a grinder-mixer.

Several hours later, Greenland awoke in a hospital bed, not knowing what had happened. His father explained to him that the auger had severed his arm below the elbow to the extent that it was beyond medical repair. He would need a prosthesis (artificial limb).

At first, the shock of having or even needing an artificial arm, especially for a nine year-old, seemed like a bad dream. But the person that probably helped Greenland more than anyone was his grandfather, who had also lost his left arm in a farming accident.

"He told me that there wasn't anything I couldn't do if I worked hard enough," recalled Greenland, "with or without an arm. It took me a while to realize he was right."

The new prosthesis arrived three weeks after Greenland's release from the hospital. Fitting, measuring, shaping and getting adjusted to the arm was the beginning of the six-week rehabilitation period.

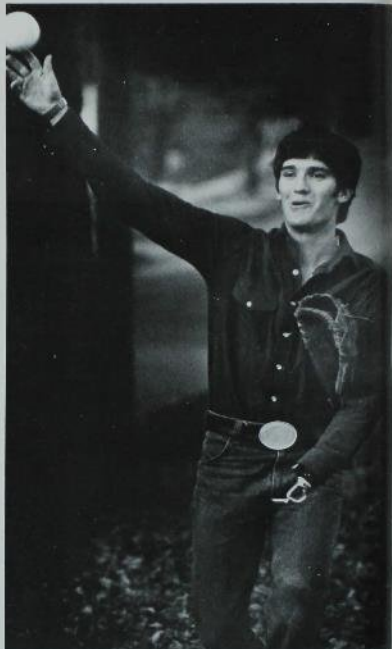

The prosthesis is attached to the upper part of his arm by three straps around Greenland's neck and shoulder. With his muscles and a few small cables, Greenland can manipulate the arm to grasp and move in seven different positions.

Since the rehabilitation period, Greenland was and still is active in sports. He can do almost anything with the aid of the arm except swim. He excelled in baseball during high school, being chosen all-conference five years in a row.

"There are different degrees of being handicapped. Most people hear, rather than think, about what that word means," Greenland said, summing up his feelings.

"For me, I'd be lost without my arm. The only difference between yours and mine is that yours looks a little different, that's all."

Karl and Marty

For many ISU students, Wednesday night is the night to put the books away, quit studying at 9:00, and go to a performance of Carl and Marty. By combining jokes, country-western music standbys and a lot of clowning around, Carl and Marty have established themselves in the hearts of their regular fans.

Carl and Marty Pappadolas are brothers who have been in the entertainment business for the past ten years. Despite some ups and downs, they have emerged as one of the more durable musical groups in Ames.

Some people liked to throw money at the duo during the act, trying to hit the sound holes of the guitars. Frequently the money would get thrown quite hard, nicking the guitars and making performing hazardous. As a result a target was made up called a Tip Shot, which hangs to the side of the stage at the Tradewinds where Carl and Marty perform.

"My favorite song is 'The Impossible Dream,'" Marty said. "It's about a man who follows what he wants to do, and sticks with it even when everyone wants him to do something else. Carl and I have stuck to our dream through everything, and we'll make it big." Marty said.

The chances of becoming big names in the music business are slim. After ten years in the field, Carl and Marty are still determined to continue and eventually become stars. To look at the fans responses they have succeeded.

Appalachia

The Appalachia Committee, an interdenominational, non-profit organization, was founded to help fulfill the needs of the residents of Sotheastern Kentucky.

The committee offers opportunities for people to work as volunteers in the Appalachian region. Two or three week long trips are planned throughout the year which provide an opportunity to form new friendships and to explore the culture. In fulfilling their goals, the committee draws upon the time, talents and material welfare of Ames residents, ISU students, and from residents of the state of Iowa. Generally, members of the committee volunteer in the collecting of clothing, household items, toys, and food throughout the year. As these items accumulate, truckloads are then delivered to Kentucky by the volunteers.

The Christmas project consists of collecting toys and other items to be used as Christmas gifts. The gifts are then distributed to the Appalachian families by the volunteers. The project is best summarized by student Teri Osterman: "One of the neatest times was being there when the truck full of toys arrived from Iowa. It really made me appreciate all the people who spent so much time and energy to get them there. And then to see the smiles on peoples faces when they were picking out a toy for their child . . . 'a time to give and a time to receive.' I think that all of us received so much more than we gave that week."

Cordelia

Cordelia Anfenson, 79, isn't ready to retire to her rocking chair, and the men of Phi Kappa Tau house are glad. Her latest job is cooking two meals a day four and a half days a week for about 35 hungry fraternity members.

Anfenson cooks lunch and supper for the men and will whip up a quick sack lunch for any latecomers. She also makes sure her boys have something to munch on after she leaves at night. Bags of "Cordelia's Special Sugar Cookies" are available to snackers each night. The cookies are usually gone in the morning so Anfenson bakes more each day.

There is more to cooking for Phi Kappa Tau than stirring the broth though.

Anfenson says she grows really close to the house members and is always sad when they graduate. "I always like the new members though," Anfenson said. "They must look for the same kind of members year after year because these boys are just as nice as the group I started with."

Mark Yashak, 19, is just like everyone else. Or he tries to be.

Mark takes classes to learn how to do things everyone else can do easily. Mark is mentally handicapped. He is part of a local program that teaches physically and mentally handicapped people skills they need to lead fuller and more productive lives in our society.

The program is called Project A.M.E.S. Students are taught appropriate behavior and dress, what to say, and all the things other people their age would do.

Mark works three hours in the morning in the pastry section of the Memorial Union cafeteria. He is expected to do the same job as any other employee. A major part of the program is to provide students with enough vocational training so they can find a job and keep it.

In the afternoon Mark goes back to Willson-Beardshear school for training in one of three other "life areas," Either Community Mobility, Domestic Mobility, or Recreation and Leisure.

Diane Larson, senior class teacher for the project, said the goal of the program is to place all students in jobs upon graduation. Many Ames business are cooperating with the project by employing the students, while other business allow the students to practice functioning in public in their establishment.

Alumni Hall serenades women's houses

Girls eagerly watch the portable piano serenades.

It's quite a heavy lead to pull a piano! Photo by Ellis

Those new to ISU may be surprised to find central campus come alive with the sound of music every Thursday night of autumn. Often numbering as many as 68, the men of Alumni Hall gather together to serenade three women's houses weekly.

Senior Jim Greufe, the group's director, says his singers normally serenade dorms, yet try to take their music to at least one sorority a season.

A poll is taken among Alumni Hall members each year to determine which houses will receive a musical visit. Greufe says due to the difficulty involved in transporting their piano long distances, they seldom leave main campus.

On a wagon closely resembling a stagecoach of old, the men place their pink and white piano and prepare to sing a variety of songs, the majority being from popular musicals. They continue their travels until the cold weather makes outdoor singing difficult. The group often accepts invitations to sing Christmas carols.

It's all in fun, but most of the group can't wait for a night of entertainment to end, for they get a chance to sing their famous finale, "Won't You Fondle Me?" Greufe says if the audience enjoys their music, they answer the song's request and sit upon the serenaders' knees. Greufe claims, "that's all the payment we need."

Knapp-Vance

Editor's Note:

Vance House signed a legally-binding contract April 14, 1980, reserving one page for their house photograph. Twenty-four hours before the picture was scheduled to be taken in November, two representatives of the house asked that Vance be released from their contractual obligation. Since the Bomb contracts for pages in this book based on the spring contracts it receives, this publication was legally bound to the publisher — hence, Vance's request was denied.

The Bomb agrees with Vance House on one point: Please DO take caution when signing contracts.

At the college level, contracts are no longer make-believe pieces of paper to be signed and destroyed on a whim. The Bomb welcomes Vance House to the REAL WORLD.

Those who serve ISU

Several thousands of faculty, students and employees work hard everyday to make ISU a successful institution. One particular group of students do their share to serve Iowa State everyday, three times a day. These students work in Food Service.

Approximately 600 students are employed by ISU Residence Hall Food Service. The students perform virtually every kitchen task. They wipe tables, wash dishes, serve meals, punch meal tickets and even help with the cooking and baking.

Stewart Burger, the Friley dining hall food service manager, said, "They don't just wash dishes. Our students do every job imaginable in the kitchen."

Students employed by food service are required to work 14 hours per week, every week of the quarter, including finals week. Wages for working in food service are paid in a rather unique manner. Instead of cash, students receive their room and board.

"It's a good deal, because you never get the chance to blow your paycheck on things you really don't need. Besides that, the work isn't that hard," said one student who worked three quarters in food service.

Food service employment seems to have gained popularity this year. According to Holly Greiner, manager of the Maple-Willow-Larch dining hall, she has received nearly 200 applications for 100 positions for winter quarter 80-81.

"I think the number of applicants is up because of the serious economic state of economy," Greiner said.

Students are hired on the basis of seniority and class schedule. All students who have worked the previous quarter are hired back. From there, students are hired depending on their class schedule openings.

Greiner said, "We first hire applicants who can work noons; because noons are always the hardest to fill."

Greek houses also hire students to work in the kitchen. It is a common practice for sororities to hire waiters. The waiters usually work lunch and dinner. The main jobs are to serve meals and then clean up afterwards.

Sorority waiters are usually paid in meals instead of cash.

Never before have so few served so many!

Agriculture

"The College of Agriculture has as its objective to improve the productivity and profitability of agriculture of Iowa and the nation. To achieve this objective we are involved in classroom teaching, research and extension teaching. Besides the traditional areas of emphasis in the college, there is an ongoing objective to improve rural areas as a place to earn a living and raise families. Agriculture is not a static industry and it is imperative that the College of Agriculture evolve as industries evolve. Our successes, our failures will have impact not only in Iowa, but what we do in the College of Agriculture will affect many people in many nations around the world."

College of Agriculture

The College of Agriculture has 3300 undergraduates, including 20 percent women. One of the largest in the nation, Iowa State's College of Agriculture is internationally known for its outstanding research, teaching and advising programs. About 35 percent of the graduates take positions in business and industry; 20 percent become farm operators or farm managers, 25 percent continue their work toward advanced degrees and many become researchers and college or high school teachers. The undergraduate program includes 22 curricula offering a wide range of career opportunities.

People are the greatest thing about ISU, especially in the College of Agriculture, according to Robert Butcher who is majoring in farm operations.

"I really care about the ag college and that is why I got so involved with it."

Among the things Robert is involved in are the farm operations club, the agriculture business club and the GSB finance committee.

"I am most proud of my activities with the ag council. It was the greatest learning experience of my college career."

When Robert graduates, he plans to get his Masters degree in business education.

Robert became involved in agriculture because, like many of the people in the College of Agriculture, he is from a farm.

"I find it to be a flexible curriculum that I can tailor to best fit my needs."

An Iowa State graduate who was a high school vocational agriculture teacher was responsible for getting Peggy Armstrong interested in agriculture and ISU.

Peggy is majoring in animal science, and she feels that ISU is the best in what she wants to do and has an excellent reputation in agriculture.

Peggy is currently serving on the National Advisory Council and was appointed in 1979 by former President Carter. The council reports to Congress on the status of vocational education around the country.

Being involved with the Future Farmers of America, Peggy works to get students involved in agriculture.

Peggy's other activities include serving as co-chairperson on both homecoming and Veishea-central committees.

Design

"People come into the Design College because they have certain interests and concerns — concerns for the quality of the area around them, how well they will be able to reach certain needs. The common thread that binds everyone together is the one interest in the world's aesthetics, the city as a whole, landscaping, buildings, and of course, all art, which is an expression that is very individual."

— Michael P. Brooks,
Dean
College of Design

About 2,000 students and four different departments make up the College of Design. A walk through the Design Center will show that this, the college's third year, has been another successful one.

Fine student work is displayed throughout the Center's five floors along with an occasional faculty showing.

Students, trained in all of the college's eight curricula are employed in commercial or private firms, government, industry, education and research. The college's goal is to provide students in design with professional and enriching opportunities in all phases of design, expand and advance their profession, and inform the public about the need for and an appreciation of good design.

If an extraordinarily wide variety of interests is a prerequisite to being a successful architect, Nina Scott has it made. From work with foreign students to design, Nina has had some rich experiences.

Nina has a strong interest in Native Americans. She is a member of the United National American Student Association. She helps make the ISU campus aware of Native Americans and encourages high school students to go on to college. Nina is also an english tutor for foreign students. Her interest in different cultures comes naturally, and is spurred on by an architect's need to "know and understand who they're building for," as Nina says.

Nina excels in her field and doesn't feel any pressure from the unequal male-female ratio. "I really don't come across any special problems," Nina says, "if anything, everyone is more willing to help. The guys are really willing — we're all just buddies."

During the summer of 1979, Nina worked in an engineering consulting firm as a draftsman and last year she helped paint all of Hawthorn Court. A member of Phi Kappa Phi, and Phi Eta Sigma, Nina is also a member of Tau Sigma Delta, an engineering honorary. She's not yet decided on her career plans, but is especially interested in graphics.

Education

"The College of Education strives to help students maximize their own growth and development and to prepare them for service in education and in education-related positions. Teacher education at Iowa State University since its earliest days has always been an important part of the University and today nearly one out of every six undergraduates is recommended for teacher certification."

Virgil S. Lagomarcino, Dean
College of Education

There are 1212 undergraduates currently enrolled in the College of Education. At the undergraduate level, the college includes students in Departments of Elementary Education, Industrial Education, Physical Education and Leisure Studies. Students preparing to teach in the secondary schools are enrolled in the department and college of their academic specialty and take their professional work within the College of Education.

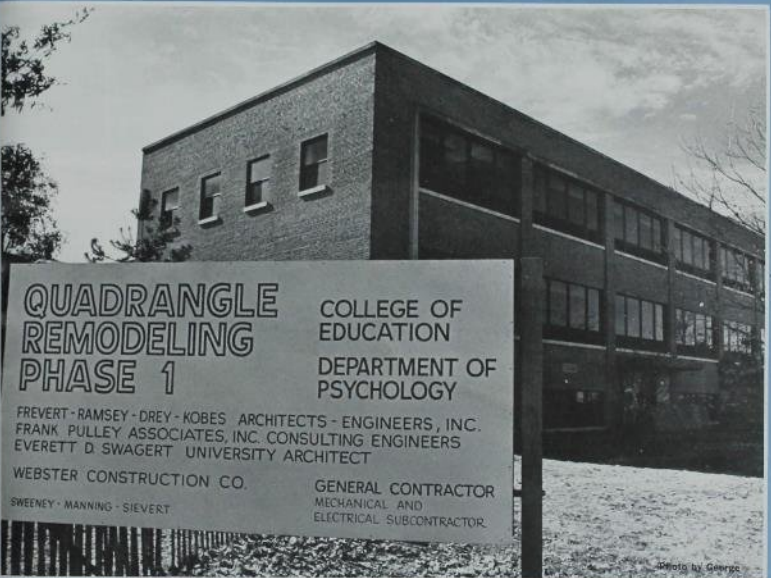

Consistent with the function of a land-grant institution, the college is committed to providing a learning environment that stresses teaching, to developing services beyond the campus to education agencies in the state and to the general public, and to identifying and supporting basic and applied research in education.

"If kids aren't interested in school during their first years there, what will become of them?"

Julianne Uhde, an elementary education major is very concerned about the future of today's children in education.

When Julianne graduates, she wants to teach in the primary grades because she feels they are the most crucial years in a child's education.

"Being a teacher is what I want to do for the rest of my life, and I am going to keep working at becoming a better teacher everyday."

Julianne is very proud of the grades she has received throughout college because, "it shows I am interested in what I'm doing."

She also feels proud of her parents because they cared enough to put her through school.

Being a Cyclone Aid at Iowa State enabled Molly Vorhes, an elementary education major, to share her knowledge of ISU with others. This meant a lot to Molly because she loves to help people.

"I love being with people and sharing with others. You might say I'm a people oriented person."

Molly, a member of the Chi Omega sorority, is very involved with her house. She represented Chi Omega during Greek Week last year.

When Molly graduates, she plans to find a teaching job in the elementary grades.

Molly feels that she is very informed in her major and is aware of what's going on in education.

"I got into elementary education because I care about little kids so much."

Engineering

"Engineering has become a major force in solving society's problems today — transportation, energy, health care — all require as part of their solution, special techniques and research. The demand is here because man is here, and none of our problems can be solved if engineering is not here."

— David R. Boylan, Dean
College of Engineering

The engineer is unique and important in modern civilization. He or she must take science's discoveries and translate them into useful products, facilities and services.

For more than 100 years excellence in engineering has been a tradition at Iowa State University. The college is one of the largest with 16 disciplines and over 5000 students.

Each year the college graduates engineers of the finest quality — men and women highly regarded by industry as well as universities. Diverse programs consistently attract exceptional students to be trained as leaders in their communities and the nation.

Working in a traditionally male-dominated field has not bothered Rebecca Potter at all — a double major in Math and Computer Engineering is just plain hard any way you look at it. Rebecca loves her field, and says she's felt no prejudice at all. "I've had to work hard like everyone else and I've been treated just the same," she says.

Rebecca is in the Honors Program for the College of Sciences and Humanities as well as the Engineering College. She's had a couple sticky situations filing both college's requirements, but Rebecca says she's been able to fill both curriculas in four years.

A member of Phi Mu Epsilon, a math honorary, and President of Eta Kappa Nu, the Electrical Engineering Honorary Society, Rebecca manages to keep up on what is going on in both colleges.

One of Rebecca's greatest thrills was working with Iowa Methodist Hospital in Des Moines helping them write a computer program for their respiratory program. They've decided to use Rebecca's program rather than buy new computer equipment, and her program will soon be published in the Journal of Clinical Engineering. Rebecca's career looks very bright, and, as she says, "It's kind of neat after all the work to see it all pay off."

"We need more minorities in the Engineering College," says John Hughes, a Nuclear Engineering major. One of John's major accomplishments at Iowa State was helping the National Society of Black Engineers become organized.

Other activities that John is involved in include the American Nuclear Society, Adult Students on Campus, the Institute of National Affairs, and John is president of the Engineering Council.

In the future John plans to work for a large construction company building nuclear power plants. His long-term goal is the desire for the vice-presidency of Westinghouse Corporation.

John has been involved in many of the changes that have taken place in the Engineering College. John says, "I'm very involved in engineering. I think I've helped steer the college."

Home Economics

'Home Economics serves households and families with respect to their concerns relating to daily living — it is supportive to the functions relating to family living — it is supportive to the functions relating to family living — Earlier all these functions were just in the household, but now these functions have expanded to serve the other larger sectors of society. So now we have diverse programs that are designed to meet the needs of individuals and groups directly or indirectly.'

— Ruth E. Deacon, Dean Home Economics College

The 1,400 students of the Home Economics College have interests ranging from studies in international home economics to hotel management. The college is proud of its increased male enrollment as well as a placement rating over 90 percent. The eight departments offer majors in twenty curricula that prepare students for a variety of family-related professional opportunities as well as a liberal education for their personal and community roles. Graduates are employed by business, industry and government or they may choose to go into teaching. The graduate is able to interpret family and consumer needs, and relate them to organizations as well as relate organization's goals and interests to society.

Involvement is the key to your college career, according to Denise Baldwin who is majoring in Textiles and Clothing, and Home Economics Education.

"I got involved in more activities than most students during years at Iowa State," Denise says.

Some of the activities that keep Denise busy include the Home Economics Education Club, the Textiles and Clothing Club and the Home Economics Advisory Council. Denise also belongs to the honorary for the Home Economics College which only takes the top 35 percent of home economic majors at ISU.

One of the more memorably experiences Denise has had was when the Textile and Clothing display she helped work on for Veishea won first place in the home economics displays.

"Not a lot of people worked on the float, so it showed outstanding group effort for those of us who did participate," Denise said.

When Denise graduates, she plans to teach high school for a while, and then pursue a career in retailing.

Sciences and Humanities

"Sciences and Humanities provides the home for the basic areas of learning. We are the liberal arts of Iowa State University. The college offers majors in liberal education related to professions in many, many areas. Unless you are a person who already has the ambition to be a professional, in a technical field, the whole concept of a liberal arts education is to go beyond vocational training. Our graduates are well-educated people; they want to be and are well-informed citizens and are learning what makes the world tick."

— Wallace A. Russell, Dean
Humanities

With over 8,000 students, six departments and the new school of Business Administration, the College of Sciences and Humanities is Iowa State's largest college. The college takes care of 70 percent of all freshman and sophomore instruction and offers over 25 majors within its departments.

Sciences and Humanities' flexible degree programs permit study in a variety of interests, abilities and goals. Students have in-depth study in one or two disciplines as well as a wide and rich range of corresponding general interests. Sciences and Humanities graduates are prepared to go on and specialize in a whole variety of areas such as law, medicine and veterinary medicine.

An Honors Student majoring in Industrial Administration, Louise Geiger spent the summer of 1980 in Washington D.C. rubbing elbows with such men as President Carter, King Hussein, Edward Kennedy and John Anderson. Well not exactly rubbing elbows, but Louise was in on quite a bit during her three-month internship with North Dakota Representative Mark Andrews. As a matter of fact, Louise has been in on what seems to be a bit of everything during her four years at Iowa State and her contributions to the College of Sciences and Humanities are outstanding.

Louise says she is especially proud of a four-page newspaper she compiled, wrote and edited on ISU's semester transition. This paper — with a distribution near 20,000 — was a successful combination of Louise's Honor's Project and a fulfillment of her GSB Cabinet Position as Director of Academics.

With an eye to politics and perhaps law school in her future, Louise has managed to achieve very impressive academic success. She has been on the Dean's List "most quarters," she says, and has received more than on scholarship, including one from the Industrial Administration Department, a very high honor. She has been a familiar face in most of her department's activities and has the distinction of being on three of ISU's most prestigious honoraries: Lamos, Cardinal Kay and Mortar Board. Even after graduation, the College of Sciences and Humanities will be reminded of Louise's enthusiastic dedication to Iowa State.

From math to music is quite a switch, but for J Kawarsky it was a natural. J began playing the piano in second grade, but entered Iowa State as a math major. Then, in the middle of his freshman year, he realized his interests and talents really were in the world of music.

"My work is serious music, not popular stuff," says J, "but sometimes I do jingles or play the piano for special functions if people ask."

J divides his time between piano, music education and composition. He hopes to enter graduate school next year in composition and would like to teach music at the college level.

Recently J has been able to show off his talents through a GSB-funded Focus Grant. GSB awards these grants for completion of a project of some creativity. J has written a composition in three movements which will be printed and copyrighted and finally performed by a choir of ISU students.

J has also been asked to direct the orchestra for the 1981 Veishea production of "West Side Story." He'll be splitting his time between that and student teaching at Ames High School during the 1981 Spring Quarter.

A member of Phi Mu Alpha, a men's musical honorary, and a Sciences and Humanities member of the Student Representative Council, J is also in the Honors Program — in fact, he's the only music major in the program. According to J, "It's a rarity that there's a music major in the program; I guess I add a little variety to what is usually a technically oriented program."

Making good friends at Iowa State is one of the best things that Connie Swanson can think of about her past four years here.

Connie is double majoring in child development and psychology. Some of the many activities she's involved in are the CD club, representative to the RCA assembly, and the home ec honors program.

"One of the things I am the most proud of is that I was elected to Phi Kappa Phe, the all-university honorary."

Connie has made a personal challenge out of keeping her gradepoint up and to do the best she can.

In the future, Connie hopes to get a job in a day care center or school after she "gets some experience."

"I do a little bit more and go beyond what I have to do."

One of Dan Sheldon's main concerns while he has been at Iowa State has been the coordination and rapport between students and faculty. As president of the Sciences and Humanities Council, Dan looked into just about every academic issue at the university from plus-minus grading to foreign language requirements. He's played a large part in the student input.

An Industrial Administration major with an accounting emphasis, Dan is looking to law school in the future. He is especially interested in tax work, and enthusiastic about what others may think is a pretty dry subject. "Tax is a developing field," Dan says, "not a static field. It's a challenge to keep abreast of what's going on."

Dan is a member of Lampos and Phi Kappa Phi, which is an honorary where students are nominated strictly through the faculty in their department. He was one of three Spring 1979 recipients of the William Schrampler scholarship in the Industrial Administration Department, and Dan is the sole student representative in the 50-member Faculty Representative Assembly which is the main policy-making body in the College of Sciences and Humanities.

During his four years at Iowa State, one might have found Lee Roberts either in a physics lab or out on the football field. Along with working toward a double major in Physics and Math, Lee has also been a tuba player in Iowa State's Marching Band since he was a freshman.

Along with his strong program in both Math and Physics, Lee has also managed to squeeze in German. Why German? For graduate school. Although he's not sure yet where he'll be, Lee says most graduate schools require, for physics at least, a foreign language, and in scientific fields, German is a good one.

Lee expects to earn his Ph.D. in four to six years, but hasn't made any firm decisions beyond that. "Physics range for partical to solid-state physics," he says, "and then you can go into nuclear physics, solar energy or even optics."

An Honors Program member since his freshman year, Lee is also a member of Lambda, Phi Mu Epsilon, which is a math honorary, and Phi Kappa Phi, an all-university nationwide honorary.

Veterinary Medicine

"People who come into the College of Veterinary Medicine want to help out both animals and people and are concerned with our environment. This college gives them a unique opportunity to do something about these concerns. Students are able to work with both animals and people on an individual basis. By helping animals we are in fact helping people. Animals provide us with both companionship and food."

Phillip T. Pearson, Dean
College of Veterinary Medicine

Iowa State's College of Veterinary Medicine is truly one of the finest in the world. There are 473 students currently enrolled in the college, with 107 of these being fourth year students.

Veterinarians work to control diseases that threaten human and animal health. In teaching and research, veterinarians constantly seek ways to prevent and solve animal and human health problems. Veterinarians in private industry conduct research and supervise the development, production, and testing of biologicals and pharmaceuticals.

Today's graduate veterinarian is a medically trained, scientifically oriented, professional person capable of rendering many services and accepting wide responsibility in all areas of animal health and many areas of public health.

Current issues affect GSB too

Although Iowa State was not exactly close to Washington, D.C., many of the happenings off campus had a great affect on campus.

Tom Jackson, vice president of GSB (Government of the Student Body), found he had to be informed on what was happening in Washington to better serve or represent the students at ISU.

"We called Washington just a few days ago to persuade Senator Jepsen (from Iowa) to vote in favor of a bill which would increase the amount of student aid for colleges," Jackson said.

GSB also had to deal with issues that were connected with or stimulated by world affairs. After the Iranian students in Terhan, Iran captured the American Embassy and were holding 50 Americans hostage, some ISU students became concerned over the amount of GSB funds allocated to the Association for Iranian Students.

Iranian students often held booths in the Memorial Union, passing out literature in support of the Iranian government. Some students objected to any possibility funds from GSB were being used for these political ventures.

Letters flooded the editorial page of the Iowa State Daily winter quarter in 1981. Some students asked GSB to investigate the use of the GSB funds by the Iranian students. After a GSB investigation, a negative answer was found. Any funds received from GSB had not been used to protest against the American government, although GSB representatives did not say it would have been illegal for funds to be used in that manner.

Inflation was another universal issue that did not miss stopping at GSB headquarters. In September, 1980, it was announced tuition would increase for the 1981-82 year. GSB also found their funds were going less distance and were able to testify that the shrinking dollar warranted more financial planning on campus.

Because of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the conflict in Iran involving about 50 U.S. hostages, military defense became an increasing concern. From this concern grew the possibility of military action by the United States. President Jimmy Carter responded to the situation by proposing a draft registration, which had not been used since 1973 after the Vietnam War.

Carter issued his plan for registration Feb. 8, 1980. His proposal called for the registration of women as well as men.

Registration was needed, Carter said, "to increase our preparedness and as a further demonstration of our resolve as a nation."

"Our objective is plain," Carter said, "to deter Soviet aggression."

Although the Equal Rights

Amendment was not approved by Congress, Carter said his decision to register women was "a recognition that both women and men are working members of our society."

The proposal for female registration required congressional approval and was defeated by an 8 to 1 vote by the House Armed Services Committee. As a result, women were not required to register.

Men registered at post offices across the country by completing a form with such basic information as their name, birthdate and Social Security number. Draft cards were not issued. The Selective Services System sent out letters confirming registration information. The data on registrants was stored in computers for ready mobilization if and when necessary. Local citizens in communities were selected and trained for potential draft-board service.

Many Americans, particularly college students, feared registration would lead to reinstating the military draft. Unlike registration, Congress would have to approve reinstatement of the draft.

It was impossible to tell how many Iowa State students were opposed to registration, but few participated in ISU's anti-draft rally March 26, 1980. Only seven students marched outside Beardshear Hall. Those who did carried signs, "War is Sin" and said their small group was primarily organized because they oppose the draft for religious reasons.

About four million men registered for the draft between July 21 and Aug. 4, 1980, but the process was almost delayed. The Federal Appellate court ruled registration was unconstitutional because it did not include women, but on July 20, 1980 Supreme Justice Brennan ruled the Supreme Court would address the question later and that registration should be conducted as planned.

U.S. hockey team surprises Soviets

The XIII Winter Olympics involved about 1,600 athletes from 38 nations competing Feb. 12-24 at Lake Placid, N.Y. for gold, silver and bronze medals.

The 150-member U.S. team captured a total of 12 medals - six golds, four silver and two bronze.

The East Germans topped all countries with 23 medals. The Soviet Union took second with 22 medals and won 10 golds, the highest number of any competing nation.

Political controversy also competed for public attention. Taiwan, barred from the Games under the name and flag of the Republic of China, was absent. Taiwan asked the International Olympic Committee for an excused absence.

Taiwan asked the committee for permission to compete under the name of the Republic of China. The committee denied the request and let the Republic of China compete saying Taiwan would have to have a new name.

Political conflict was not the only problem with the 1980 Games. New York experienced a transportation problem which left about six thousand people stranded. A state of emergency was declared and buses were sent to the city by the State Transportation Department.

Despite the political and local problems, the Winter Olympics were held with the U.S. competing strong in skating and skiing divisions.

A great majority of the U.S. medals were to the credit of one man - Eric Heiden. A speed skater, Heiden became the first athlete to win five gold medals in individual events.

Another gold by the U.S. was one of great surprise. The U.S. Ice Hockey team won the Olympic championship.

The victory touched a wave of jubilation across the U.S. that rivaled the national euphoria of Feb. 22, 1980, when the U.S. upset the Soviet Union in playoffs.

The U.S. squad was composed of college and amateur minor league players and was not expected to challenge many of the teams.

The U.S. surprised everyone by going undefeated in the opening round and tied Sweden, 2-2 in their first game. The team beat Czechoslovakia (7-3), Norway (5-1), Rumania (7-2) and West Germany (4-2).

The Americans stunned the world Feb. 22 by defeated the Soviets, 4-3, in the final round of playoffs. The Soviets were the world and Olympic champions and thought to be unbeatable. The last time the U.S.S.R. failed to take the gold was in 1960, when another underdog U.S. team took the Olympic title.

U.S. answers Soviets with boycott

Americans were outraged by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan on Dec. 25, 1979. The invasion began with the settling of Soviet troops in Afghanistan without violence, but still was not considered much of a Christmas present for the United States.

The U.S. became concerned as the Soviets increased their military forces. Afghanistan neighbors Iran and Pakistan and President Carter feared "a Soviet-occupied Afghanistan threatened both Iran and Pakistan and was a stepping stone to possible control over the world's major oil suppliers.

In a nationwide address, Carter denounced the Soviet military's "threat to peace" and announced measures that would be taken by the U.S. if Soviet troops were not withdrawn.

Many Americans thought these measures were political threats, but later the threats became action.

The first measure taken by the U.S. prohibited the delivery of 17 tons of grain to the Soviets for their livestock. This became known of Carter's "grain embargo."

The most controversial action taken by the U.S. was the boycott of the Summer Olympics held in Moscow, Russia July 19-Aug. 3, 1980.

Carter believed the boycott would be the most drastic retaliation. The Soviet government was deprived of trade from an estimated 18,500 Americans who would have attended the Games before the boycott. In addition, the U.S. revoked their funding from the Olympics.

A controversy arose among nations and U.S. citizens concerning the 3,000 Americans who attended the Games despite the boycott.

Those opposing the boycott argued sports and politics should be separate and that "athletes should not be used to achieve political means."

The American presence was still felt at the 1980 Games with a five-member delegation from Puerto Rico, including three Americans, which competed despite Carter's request. Most U.S. athletes did stay home and sacrificed a chance they had worked for four years.

1980-the year of "energy awareness"

To say energy was a problem for the United States would be an understatement. Energy, or the lack of energy sources, was such a problem that President Carter declared 1980, "the year of energy conservation."

In his State of the Union address, Jan. 23, 1980, Carter said the need for conservation was made evident in connection with the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the situation in Iran.

"The crises in Iran and Afghanistan have dramatized a very important lesson: Our excessive dependence on foreign oil is a clear, and present danger to our national security."

Carter told Congress and the nation.

Carter urged Congress to approve his energy policy for the country's welfare. Congress did approve the policy and in February, 1980 the U.S. had a comprehensive energy policy.

The policy was designed as a major conservation effort. Thermostats were to be kept as low as possible.

Citizens were encouraged to seek other means of transportation such as buses or carpools to save gasoline, which was also decreasing in availability, but increasing in price.

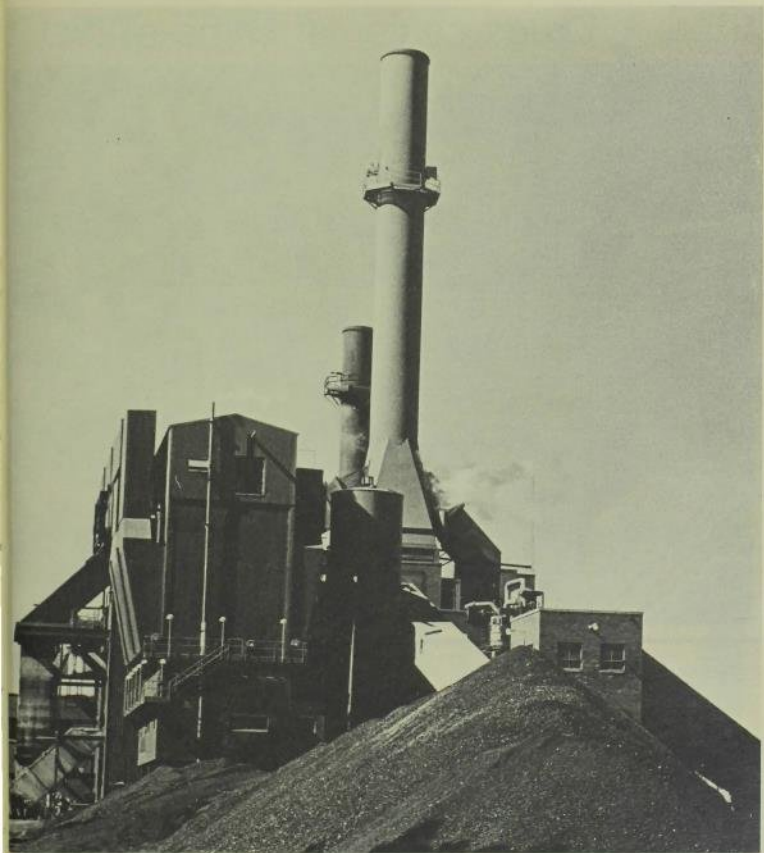

In response to the gasoline shortage, Carter set gasoline conservation guidelines for all 50 states and said the suggestions would become mandatory. Carter also set a mandatory limit of 8.2 barrels of fuel to be imported to the U.S. per day.

The energy policy also included objectives in the field of energy research, initiatives to develop solar energy and other fossil fuels.

With the national energy policy, separate energy-designed programs and Carter's plea of conservation, 1980 was at the very least a year of "energy awareness."

Drugs center of crime at ISU

Crime continued to rise and, as in the past, was a specific problem for metropolitan areas. The national crime rate rose 6.5 percent.

At Iowa State and in Ames, crime, barring the usual traffic tickets from Campus Security, were in the area of drug possession and selling.

Twenty-four persons- including 12 ISU students- were arrested April 1, 1980 after a six-month investigation into drug dealing in Ames. The persons were arrested for allegedly delivering marijuana, cocaine, hashish and LSD.

There was some controversy among ISU students as to the methods used by the Ames Police Department. The police sent an undercover officer, Mark Sandon, to the homes of the 24 persons suspected of possessing illegal substances.

Some of the arrested persons said Sandon smoked marijuana with them on several occasions before the arrests. Ames police denied this charge, but some ISU students were reported in the Iowa State Daily as saying police were unfair in using an undercover officer regardless of the officer's actions.

Nationally, 1980-81 involved some historical crimes and investigations. One of these was the Gacy murder case which was called the worst mass murder in U.S. history.

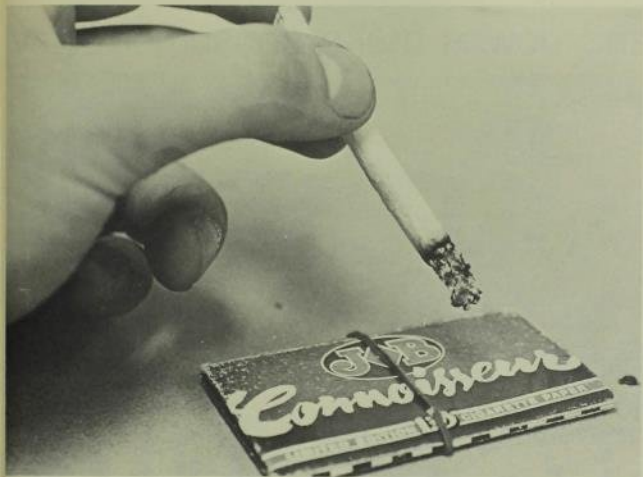

John Gacy of Des Plaines, Ill. was sentenced to the electric chair for the sex murders of 33 boys and men. The execution date was set for June 2, 1980 but was delayed by an automatic appeal required by Illinois law. The appeal was made and a jury reduced the sentence to life in prison.

Gacy was arrested December, 1978 and charged with the murder of Robert Priest, 15. Gacy confessed to police he had committed other murders between 1972 and 1978 and most of his victims could be found at his residence in Des Plaines.

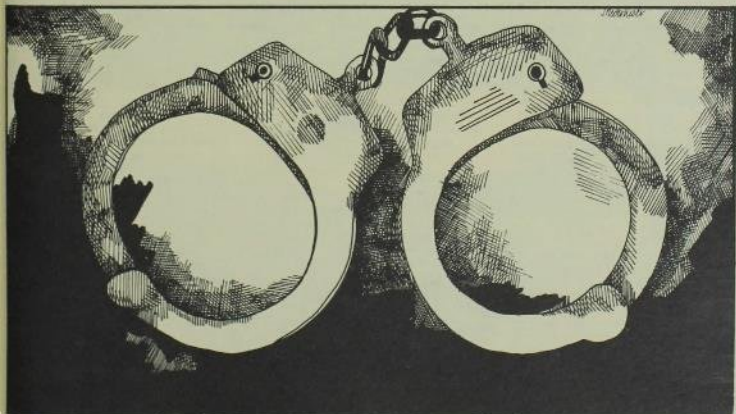

The police found 29 bodies under Gacy's house. Four bodies were found in the Des Plaines River after Gacy told police where they were located.

A building contractor, Gacy allegedly lured his victims to his home with the promise of high paying jobs. Gacy engaged in sex with the men and then murdered them, usually by strangulation.

Ups and downs make consumer dizzy

The familiar saying, "Money makes the world go around," was never more realistic than in 1980-81. The economy, with inflation and energy shortages, made the country and the consumer somewhat dizzy.

The price of gas per gallon had increased about 30¢ in early 1980. Prices for food products at the unfinished-goods stage declined about .8 percent in January, but that was the last decrease to be found that year.

Increasing prices were attributed to the rising costs of production and production materials, thus costing the producer more. The consumer could testify that prices were rising and the testimonials could be gathered randomly from anyone who ventured into a store.

The Carter Administration and private sector economists were disturbed by the increases, which generally were passed on to the consumer.

Two economists from Brookings Institute, a Washington-based private research group, called for mandatory wage and price controls and gas rationing to solve the nation's economic problems.

Barry Bosworth, 1979 director of Carter's Council on Wage and Price Stability, told Carter inflation would increase if drastic measures were not taken.

Senator Edward Kennedy, who challenged Carter for the Democratic nomination, also supported wage and price controls.

Despite the advice from "experts" and critics, Carter did not deviate from his economic policy which planned for recessionary forces to naturally curb inflation.

A poll conducted by Associated Press found the majority of voters were opposed to wage and price controls and strongly opposed to gas rationing, but were unhappy with Carter's decision to "let inflation take its course and work itself out."

Although no comprehensive economic program was implemented in 1980, legislature steps were taken to ease the effects of inflation. Loan programs with lower interest rates were developed and a housing bill decreasing the rate on property and house purchases was passed. As a total picture, a clear solution dissolving inflation was not seen.

Party platforms look black and white

The 1980 presidential election was one of extreme choice for the voter.

Republicans and Democrats established party platforms stating their positions on current issues. The contrast between the two may as well have been black and white.

Abortion was an emotional yet political issue during the election. A position on the legalization of abortion had traditionally been included in both platforms, but was not considered to be a significant issue. This could not be said of the election between Jimmy Carter and Republican Ronald Reagan.

Much of the attention given abortion was attributed to the Hyde Amendment. The Hyde Amendment, named after its author, Representative Henry Hyde, prohibited the department of Health Education and Welfare from using Medicaid funds for abortions.

The Supreme Court ruled 5 to 4 June 30, 1980 in favor of the amendment. The Court said neither the federal or state government could be required to finance abortions for lower income women.

The Republicans took an anti-abortion position while the Democrats supported the status quo of legalized abortions.

The Republicans also took an anti-ERA position which upset many ERA groups such as NOW, the National Organization of Women. The group publicly threw their support to Carter out of protest.

Another issue throughout the election was the condition of U.S. military defense. The Republicans favored a higher defense budget and said the U.S. defense was no longer strong enough to threaten other world powers. Carter claimed the U.S. defense was superior in technology and was only out numbered by the Soviets.

The 1980 presidential election was much like a tennis match when debating issues. The ball, representing the views, arguments and comments of Carter and Reagan, was volleyed back and forth until votes were cast Nov. 4, 1980.

Iowa State had several visitors Winter and Spring quarters in 1980 and two were candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Senator Edward Kennedy, one of the candidates held a rally at Iowa State. Kennedy-supported booths could be found at Memorial Union and sometimes right next to a Carter campaign booth.

President Jimmy Carter defeated Edward Kennedy by a 2 to 1 margin in the Iowa caucuses.

The turnout for the caucuses nationwide, the official step toward the selection process, was much larger than in the past. About 60 percent more Democrats participated in the 1980 caucuses than in 1976.

convention Aug. 11-15, 1980.

Kennedy told the nation why he decided to remain a candidate on ABC's "Issues and Answers" program Jan. 20.

"Enough is enough," Kennedy said. "We've seen a tripling of interest rates, a tripling of inflation and a foreign policy that's out of control."

"I think we ought to debate these issues," Kennedy added. "That's why I remain a candidate."

Kennedy made six trips to Iowa, one to Iowa State. President Carter did little active campaigning himself. He said his major priorities were to free the U.S. hostages in Iran and deal with the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, not to campaign on his own behalf.

Carter's principal surrogate was Vice President Walter Mondale who urged Iowans to be understanding toward Carter's grain embargo.

Many Iowans were concerned about the grain embargo fearing profits would be cut in agricultural states such as Iowa.

Mondale while visiting farm families in Winterset, Iowa said, "We knew there would be some problems in Iowa, but we thought farmers would understand. Once in a while in America we have to make sacrifices."

There was very little suspense at the Democratic convention and on Aug. 13 Kennedy withdrew from the ballot. Later that evening President Carter was nominated and would campaign for the next three months in hopes of winning his second term in office.

Reagan officially wins nomination

Ronald Reagan gained the presidential nomination at the Republican convention July 16, 1980.

Reagan received 1,939 delegate votes. John Anderson of Illinois was running as an independent candidate and received 37 votes. George Bush, who had received 13 votes after releasing his delegates. Anne Armstrong, former U.S. ambassador to Britain, received one delegate vote.

Senator Paul Laxalt of Nevada, Reagan's national campaign chairman, formally placed Reagan's name in the nomination.

George Bush was selected as Reagan's vice president, July 15. In his acceptance speech, Bush compared Reagan and the objectives of the Republican Party to that of Dwight Eisenhower's in 1952.

"Reagan is a man of decency, compassion and strength," Bush said. "He will lead America into a new era of greatness in this decade of the 1980's."

Bush went on to claim he had detected

"an air of victory" at the convention, but cautioned that while Jimmy Carter may have "failed as a President" he was still a campaigner who would use the power of his office.

After the convention, Reagan wasted no time in developing a nationwide campaign strategy. Reagan soon spread his philosophy and the Republican's "A New Beginning" slogan. He said his objective was to replace Carter's "trust me" philosophy of government with a government that placed trust in the values of the people. Reagan announced those values as being "family, work, neighborhood and peace." Reagan campaigners launched early with posters, radio announcements and television appearances. The most commonly used commercial rang the words "The time is now - for Reagan."

In addition, Reagan actively met with various interest groups attempting to gather support. The two groups on the top of Reagan's list were the women and black voters.

The Republican platform rejected its support of the ERA, so Reagan met with many women delegates to say that he did not support Equal Rights Amendment, but did support the appeal of any state of federal law which discriminated against women. He also promised to consider a woman for any vacancy on the Supreme Court.

Reagan also met with 121 black delegates at the convention. He told the delegates that the Democrats only answer to the problems of minorities were "handouts in the form of welfare" and that this was another form of bondage.

John Anderson, a Republican, continued to run on the Independent ticket. Most experts interviewed by television networks, said Anderson posed no real threat to Reagan but could take a few votes from Carter. For some voters, Anderson represented a "protest vote" for those unhappy with Carter and Reagan.

Nevertheless, Reagan did not direct much of his campaign against Anderson, but focused upon criticizing the Carter administration and winning the support of strong interest groups.

Reagan sets record defeating Carter

Reagan was elected the 40th President of the United States Nov. 4, 1980 by an outpouring of support from across the nation. Elected along with him as vice president was George Bush.

Incumbent President Jimmy Carter won only six states and the District of Columbia. Carter conceded from the election at 9:50 p.m. election night. This was the earliest concession since 1904 when Alton B. Parker bowed to Theodore Roosevelt. Carter also became the first incumbent president to be defeated since Herbert Hoover in 1932.

Reagan won 43,201,220 or 51 percent of the total votes cast. Carter received 34,913,332, or 41 percent of the popular vote. Independent candidate John Anderson drew 5,581,379 votes which was seven percent of the total.

By taking seven percent, Anderson became eligible for the electoral ballot. He was the first independent candidate to receive this recognition since 1968 when George Wallace of Alabama did the same on the independent ticket.

The electoral count was more sweeping than the popular vote. Reagan won 489 electoral votes while Carter took 49.

Reagan captured most of Carter's native South, all of the West, much of the East and almost all of the Midwest.

Carter's largest win was his home state of Georgia where he served as governor before becoming president. His other victories were in Maryland, Rhode Island, Minnesota, Hawaii, West Virginia and the District of Columbia.

The rest was Reagan country.

Although many felt Reagan would win, few predicted such a sweeping victory. Some experts said the decisive turn to Reagan came within two or three days of the election and thus was not indicated in earlier polls.

Additional polls were taken of voters leaving the voting booth. One of these "exit polls" conducted by ABC network showed 25 percent of the voters had up their minds during the last week of the campaign. Of these, 44 percent chose Reagan and 38 voted for Carter. A remaining 13 percent voted for John Anderson. Most of the voters showed a dissatisfaction with Carter as their rationale for supporting Reagan. The main ingredients in this dissatisfaction were the economy and the problem of inflation.

Dissatisfaction was also expressed against Carter's handling of foreign policy. It was speculated that this grew in intensity prior to voting because of Iran's demands of concession by the U.S. in exchange for the 52 American hostages.

Interests groups defeat Carter

According to polls by the ABC television network and Times magazine on Election Day, the Democrats lost their traditional support from blue-collar workers, Roman Catholics and Jewish voters. These segments behind the Democrats could usually be counted upon and had been since the New Deal days of President Franklin Roosevelt.

Ronald Reagan also managed to capture 62 percent of the women voters and almost 70 percent of the black population in the U.S. In 1976, Carter captured 80 percent of the women voters and 98 percent of the black segment.

One thing the polls could not explain was the low turnout of voters in the 1980 election. The turnout was only 52 percent of the nation's 160,491,000 eligible voters. This percentage was the lowest since 1948 when 51 percent voted in the victory of Harry S. Truman over Thomas E. Dewey.

Another faction from the ABC poll found that Reagan received more endorsements from U.S. daily newspapers. Editor and Publisher magazine reported in its November issue that Reagan received the endorsement of 443 daily newspapers while Carter received endorsements from 126 dailies. Forty dailies supported Ed Clar, the presidential candidate for the Libertarian Party.

A Republican candidate receiving more endorsements was unusual and unexpected. The only time a Democratic presidential candidate has received more newspaper endorsements was in 1964 when Lyndon Johnson ran against and defeated Barry Goldwater.

It was also found that those newspapers supporting Reagan also had the largest combined circulation. The total circulation supporting Reagan was 17,561,333 or 42 percent of the total U.S. readership. Newspapers supporting Carter had a combined readership of 7,782,078 or almost 29 percent of the total readership.

The analysis given as an explanation for the election results concluded that President Jimmy Carter lost because of dissatisfaction among blue-collar workers, blacks, women, Catholics and Jewish people. And, perhaps the press too.

He's the son of a shoe salesman

Ronald Wilson Reagan, the 40th President of the United States, was born Feb. 6, 1911 in Tampico, Ill., the son of an Irish shoe salesman.

Graduating in 1932 with a bachelor's degree in economics and sociology from Eureka (Ill.) College, Reagan became a sportscaster in Iowa. Five years later he signed a film contract with Warner Brothers and appeared in over 50 films for the company.

Reagan served as president of the Screen Actors Guild from 1947 to 1952. His major contribution was his cooperation in the movie industry's 1949 effort to purge actors suspected of having Communist interest.

Reagan gave a speech in support of Barry Goldwater at the Republican convention in 1964 in San Francisco, Calif. Some commentators were quoted as saying Reagan's speech was the most brilliant political debut since William Jennings Bryan's "Cross of Gold" speech in 1896.

Reagan ran for Governor in California in 1966, defeating the Democratic incumbent, Edmund G. (Pat) Brown by one million votes.

Many experts credit Reagan for successfully reforming California's welfare system. The California Welfare Reform Program, appointed and developed by Reagan, showed a reduction of 400,000 people from the state's welfare list and a resulting saving of almost four million dollars.

Reagan was easily re-elected in 1970 after unsuccessfully trying for the 1968 presidential nomination. During his second term as governor, Reagan established task forces to deal with street crime, taxes and restructuring local governments.

In March of 1976, two years after stepping down as governor, Reagan declared his presidential candidacy. He challenged the Republican incumbent, Gerald Ford, and aimed criticism at Ford's policy of detente with the Soviet Union and at the secret diplomacy of Ford's secretary of state, Henry Kissinger.

Reagan was defeated by 117 delegate votes on the first ballot at the Republican convention.

Reagan returned to private life, but continued to make political speeches and radio boardcasts until Nov. 13, 1979. At this time he officially declared his bid for the 1980 Republican nomination. He won this nomination.

Reagan managed to defeated President Jimmy Carter on Nov. 4, 1980. The electoral vote was so overwhelming in Reagan's favor that Carter conceded the race at 9:50 p.m. eastern time on Election Day.

Reagan began interviewing possibilities for his cabinet and had most of the positions filled by Dec. 22, 1980. Reagan took the oath of office Jan. 20, 1981 and officially became the 40th President of the United States.

ISU hosts World Affairs Week

Human rights, population and agriculture were among the global issues addressed during the 16th annual Institute on World Affairs conference Dec. 7 to Dec. 12 at Iowa State.

The theme was "What's ahead: The Challenge of the 1980's." The week-long conference included lectures, panel discussions, films and displays. All events were for ISU students and the Ames community, at free admission.

The keynote speaker was Lawrence L.

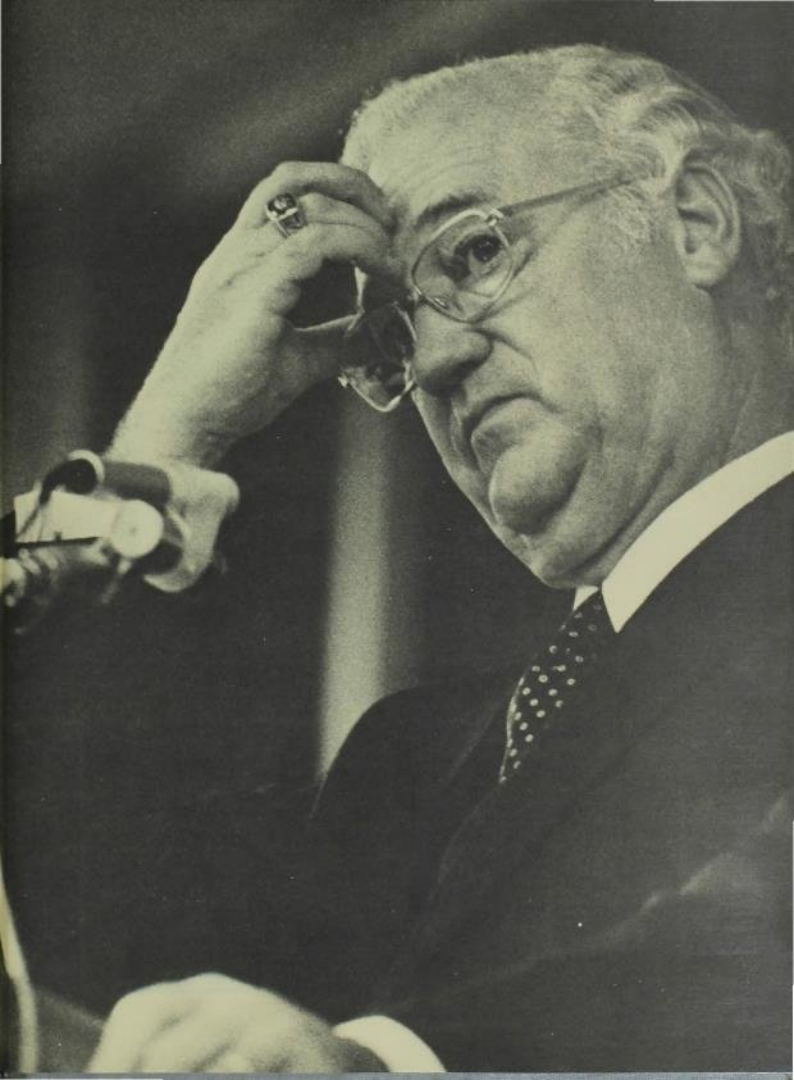

Boger, president of Oklahoma State University in Stillwater, Oklahoma. International figures appearing during the conferences were Gerhard Eiston, executive director of Amnesty International, the Rev. Endicio de la Torre, a former political prisoner exiled from the Philippines, and Dick Clark, former U.S. senator for Iowa and coordinator of refugee affairs.

The conference began Dec. 7 with a lecture, "Ideas Under Arrest: Censorship in South Africa," by Daniel Kuene, professor of African language and literature, the University of Wisconsin.

The subject of agriculture consumed most of Dec. 8th. Films and discussions were held in the Pioneer Room of the Memorial Union. The productivity of the Mexican farmer, the economic development of Latin America and the food and technological needs of the next century were among the major topics.

Politics and problems are noticed

Tuesday, Dec. 9, focused upon the situation of the world's resources. Michael Harrington, Chairman of the Democratic Sociological Organized Committee, lectured on Third World resources (or lack of resources) at Benton Auditorium. Other lectures were given concerning western petroleum supplies and national energy policies and alternatives.

Human rights was the next topic addressed with the use of ABC news films of the political hostages in Iran. The films consisted of a summary of interviews with the Iranian officials holding the 52 American hostages, once employed at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, Iran and the alternatives considered by the U.S. government to gain their release.

Over-population in undeveloped countries was also considered in other films and lectures that day, as well as exploring trends in the U.S. for Americans moving from urban to rural areas.

The conference ended Dec. 12 after exploring the relationship between world religions and political systems. A film, "Collision Course," was shown involving the concerns of Marco's government in the Philippines as well as the government.

Exhibits, highlighting each of these topics, were displayed at the ISU Library and the lower level of the Memorial Union during the entire week.

The Institute of World Affairs conference, as in the past 16 years, was funded by the ISU Government of the Student Body (GSB).

Iranians hold America hostage

What became so commonly known as the "Iranian crisis" was perhaps the most alarming controversy of the year. It began Nov. 4, 1979 when Iranian students in Tehran, Iran captured the American Embassy and held 53 Americans hostage. Their restraint lasted until Jan. 20, 1981, which seemed like an eternity for the hostages and their families.

The hostages were held for bargaining purposes. The students were supporters of Iran's new religious ruler, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, and they demanded the U.S. submit their exiled ruler, Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

Pahlavi, the former shah of Iran, had been given permission by President Jimmy Carter to enter the U.S. after his exile for medical treatment at Cornell Medical Center in New York City.

The shah was accused of having thousands of Iranians executed during his rule and misusing more than one billion dollars in government funds. The Iranian government demanded return of the shah to put him on trial for these crimes.

The Carter administration responded to this request with a firm denial. The coming months consisted of a series of demands, insults and actions between Iran and the United States.

Attempts were made by the U.S. to free the hostages. The first was a request by President Carter to the United Nations Security Council. Carter asked the council to officially demand the release of the hostages. In December, 1979, the council made this demand, but Iran refused to release the hostages.

U.S. citizens were outraged at Iran's refusal and the Iranians displayed hostility toward the United States for protecting the shah.

People in Tehran held protests, but instead of condemning the shah, the hostile chants and signs were against America.

Chants of "Death to America" filled the streets outside the embassy. Khomeini told his followers that America must share the shah's guilt.

Protests also hit the United States. Many of these took places at U.S. colleges and universities, particularly those which had Iranian students enrolled.

Anti-Iranian feelings were demonstrated at Iowa State. ISU had about 200 Iranian students enrolled in 1980. Five days after the embassy was captured, University officials had to remove about 30 "Iranians Go Home" signs painted in red on ISU sidewalks.

This gesture was followed by a much larger demonstration. On Nov. 9, 1979 between 500 and 1,000 ISU students marched in a noisy, but nonviolent, demonstration protesting the Iranian's action.

The protest was billed, "The American Protest for the Freedom of Hostages in Iran." After winding through campus, the marchers split into two groups. One headed for the Memorial Union where a debate between Iranian students and those opposing Iran was held.

Carter continued his attempts to put pressure on the Iranians. Carter banned the sale of military equipment and stopped exports of food to Iran.

21 Notices

REAL IRANIANS ARE ASHAMED OF HOSTAGE-TAKING. Welcome back to Freedom.

Some Americans objected to Carter's methods of dealing with the situation and wanted military action to be taken.

Carter repeatedly said he would not take this type of action unless the Iranians indicated actual harm would be done to the hostages. It was only after the Iranians said they were planning to put the hostages on trial as spies, that Carter said military action was a real possibility.

Carter spent many hours conferring with his advisors during the crisis. In January, 1980, Carter asked U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim to travel to Iran and investigate the safety of the hostages. Waldheim returned saying the hostages were safe, but that he had no luck in convincing Khomeini to release them.

For many, the crisis seemed much like a tennis match and the ball bounced between the two nations. In response to Carter's sanctions, Iran attempted to expel U.S. news reporters from Tehran. Iranian officials said the media was "not sending the truth to the American people."

Messages were exchanged between Iran and the U.S. periodically. Iran asked for the U.S. to confess to charges of manipulation and intervention in Iran. Carter refused.

The most aggressive attempt to rescue the hostages was a secret military mission April 25, 1980, which ended in failure and tragedy.

The mission involved a ten-man U.S. aircraft crew and was ordered to fly into Tehran and rescue the hostages.

During the mission the crew experienced equipment failure. As a result, the craft crashed in a remote desert area in Iran. Eight crew members were killed and two injured. After the tragedy was reported, Carter issued a statement accepting full responsibility for ordering the mission.

While government officials exchanged messages, so did students at Iowa State. The editorial page of the Iowa State Daily was flooded with opinions. Some students condemned Iran and the Iranian students at ISU. Some of the Iranian students belonging to the Iranian Student Association also wrote in defense of their home country.

After 14 months, Americans began to wonder if the hostages would ever see the U.S. again. Families of the hostages had survived over a year on hope.

Many Americans, as a symbol of this hope, tied yellow ribbons on trees near their residences. This was a symbol of hope and faith that one day the hostages would return to see the ribbons as conveyed in a popular song, "Tie A Yellow Ribbon Round The Old Oak Tree."

On Jan. 20, 1980, the same day Ronald Reagan took the oath of office, the hostages boarded a plane which took them from Iran to a U.S. airbase in Germany. On Jan. 22, the hostages were warmly received in the U.S. at West Point Military Academy.

Then, former president Jimmy Carter greeted the hostages in Germany upon Reagan's request. Carter spoke to the hostages and issued a statement saying that the hostages had been treated much worse than the U.S. government was led to believe. The hostages later revealed stories of mental and physical abuse by their Iranian captors.

These reports angered many Americans and debates between Iranian students and others took place all over again. Despite the ill-feelings felt by Americans toward the Iranians, most were thankful that the hostages finally saw their yellow ribbons.

To explore the future and re-visit the past, thinking is needed. Time spent now, seeing the new and old in very special ways, requires totally engulfing one's mind and eyes into the sights and experiences of today ... requires conscious vision. The "Dawning of Awareness" has been captured in a very minute way through the 1981 BOMB ... hopefully, the rainbows will be seen before the shadows close in.
