Changes

Some things are sacrificed,

Some things bring

Some things may pass

Reaganomics

With the return of college students in the fall also comes the return of many businesses to Ames which close down during the summer months while their major purchasers leave for summer vacation. While this is just a seasonal slump, most businesses do open up again when the students return.

The current slump in the economy hasn't brought a decline in the total number of businesses in Ames. In fact, this year the Ames market has seen a gain in the number of businesses. In Campustown alone five new businesses have filled vacant spots or moved to new locations since the 8283 school year began. Several of the Ames businesses that have shut down in the last year due to Reaganomics have been chains that have closed their doors across the nation. As it stands now there are more businesses in Ames, but they all operate on a much tighter cash flow this year.

One reason stores are experiencing a tighter cash flow is that the amount of money a customer can afford to spend is much lower than it used to be. Inflation has forced everyone to monitor their spending more closely.

Overall, the Ames businesses this year are more aware of their cash flow and are generally more conservative because of the nation's current economic situation.

Judy Klas

Left: Kerr McGee was one Ames business that couldn't overcome Reaganomics this past year. With windows boarded up it becomes a sign of the times. Above: Inflation is one aspect that affects students' lifestyles. Gas prices in Ames have been fluctuating and gradually creeping to all time highs.

Kevin Pepp

Reaganomics forced a change in the lifestyles of many ISU students. This year, more than ever before, students had to watch their budgets and this was reflected in their spending habits.

"I don't get out as much as I did last year," said sophomore Kristin Kestel. "For Sunday dinner I wander over to my sister's house for freebies." Kestel also worked food service ten hours each week to help pay for school.

Some students resort to buying used clothing to stay within their budget. Consignment shops are doing booming business. D and S Consignment, located at 538 South Duff, opened in mid September. Owner Sally Yetter has been very pleased with business. "We've been swamped," is her best description of business. "We get a lot of students in here," she added.

Even though Reaganomics has caused students to tighten their belts, at least they are finding ways to do it comfortably and fashionably.

Andrea Schardeln

Getting crazy, being with friends, or just taking a walk by yourself are all ways of escaping from the pressures and drudgery of being a student. Everyone needs a break once in a while, and these days people are coming up with ways to escape that don't cost a lot of money. Of course, ISU students have always been good at stretching their dollars.

Going to a bar is a popular way to get away. Whether it's no cover, tufers, dime draws, or ladies' night, there's always someplace having a special. Dorm dwellers often go to Free Friday Flicks, where the crowd passes the time before the movie starts with paper airplanes and cribbage games, or else to "cultural" films like Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Masses of people also go to the SGB movies in the Maintenance Shop or the movies in Carver 101 sponsored by various groups.

A trip to the video arcade can really take your mind off things, but they'll eat your quarters before you know it. Of course, some people who have invested enough money in practice can make a twenty-five cent game last fifteen minutes. A trip to hit one of the ice cream places on or near campus is popular on those hot early fall and spring evenings. Students have even been known to go out to the shopping mall to watch kids and old people. Other people escape by just turning their stereos up loud and relaxing in their rooms, with or without a can of beer. Everyone has his or her own way to escape from everyday routine, and ISU students seem to be finding all kinds of ways to do it.

"Our rainbow merchandise sells just like that!" says Linda Wilson, owner of Balloon Bouquets Boutique, as she snaps her fingers.

Are we attracted to rainbows because we're subconsciously looking for that pot of gold that the symbol implies? Or do we just like the bright colors? Whatever the answer, one thing is certain: Rainbow novelties are selling like hotcakes here in Ames.

Balloon Bouquets Boutique is a paradise for rainbow collectors. Rainbow items for sale include pillows, stationery, greeting cards, tins, bags, posters, and even a blow-up rainbow mobile which is labeled "The Inflatable Wallhanging for Believers of All Ages." Wilson points out that not only the symbol of the rainbow is popular, but also the colors, which are showing up more often in clothes and fashion accessories.

Coach House Gifts is another popular place in Ames for rainbow lovers. Mark Riggert, manager of Coach House, says the trend started in California and has spread into the midwest. He notes that rainbows are often teamed with unicorns, and speculates that their popularity is linked to the "mythology craze" which is taking place in America.

It does seem to be more than a coincidence that this rainbow fad is taking place at the same time as our current economic and social troubles. Perhaps, like Dorothy in The Wizard of Oz, we're searching for that special dream place "somewhere over the rainbow." Only there's one difference: Our rainbows aren't in the sky but on coffee mugs, posters, and other assorted paraphernalia.

With the overriding, ever present problems of Reaganomics and financial aid cutbacks students manage to not only maintain but to attain higher goals.

The changes which took place in 1982-83 across the country did not exclude the students of ISU. Most students and faculty felt the crunch of this last year as they were forced to tighten their budgets and find less expensive means of entertainment.

This isn't the first time that ISU students have been faced with an economic crisis. As with all political and economic cycles, most students made the choice to hang in there and weather the storm, hoping the climate would change before it affected them too seriously.

The students had the knowledge that education was the primary tool for achieving established goals, and thus were willing to bend with the changes.

Adversity has a way of strengthening, or weakening positions. We can only hope that it has toughened us and given us the experience of facing challenges today as well as preparing us to meet challenges in the future.

Summer

Insane. Intense. Incredible. From Veishea to finals week, the spring season at ISU is a time for celebration. Students begin crawling out of the woodwork and shedding their winter padding. When the temperature climbs to 60 degrees spring fever begins climbing also. With spring well underway and finals upon us we move to the solitude, silence and simplicity of summer. The enrollment drops from 24,000 to 8,500. A trip across campus becomes a lonely hike or a time to relax. With a cool drink in hand and donned in next to nothing, the summer is here and gone before you know it.

The AMAZING Hilton

So you'd like to see an indoor rodeo, or maybe seat over 14,000 for a basketball game? Well, Hilton Coliseum is the place to go. The multipurpose nature of the Coliseum brings versatility to the Iowa State Center.

The cement floor of Hilton was transformed into a dirt covered corral for the Great Plains Championship Rodeo. As the mooing of steers echoed off the walls, spectators watched cowboys calf roping, bull riding and bronco busting on sixty truckloads of displaced dirt.

A louder echo was heard when the NAII Invitational Tractor and Truck Pull Championships used more truckloads of dirt. Tractors and trucks, weighing up to 9,200 pounds, try pulling a weight sled generating up to 60,000 pounds of drag. The longest distance pulled wins.

The unadorned cement floor of Hilton Coliseum suits the Muscular Dystrophy Association just fine. Each spring hundreds of ISU students put on their dancing shoes for thirty hours to raise money for disease victims.

Add a few chairs to the floor and Hilton is ready for Neil Diamond, Chicago, Kenny Rogers and many others. Concertgoers enjoy the Coliseum because its size makes it a tour stop for many top singers and bands.

Sports fans need look no farther than the Iowa State Center for their winter sports. The Coliseum is used for ISU wrestling, basketball and gymnastics. The Hockey Club plays a few of its games there as well. Hilton technicians are kept busy switching from one sport to another. The Coliseum truly is the home of the Cyclones.

Hilton's construction costs were privately funded through students and alumni, and the contributors certainly got the most for their money. The many uses of Hilton Coliseum weren't envisioned by the architects when it was built in 1971, but each year the possibilities broaden. Who knows what might be booked next year? The NCAA Swim Championships?

What kind of rain would you like?

With the stage taking the place of a dirt floor and the backdrop depicting the wide-open western sky, the Guthrie Theater presented The Rainmaker at C.Y. Stephens Auditorium on February 12 and 13, 1982.

"Mammals drink it, fish swim in it and little boys jump in it . . . water." This 1954 play tells the story of what effect the lack of water had on a western family during a drought. Having gone for almost a month without rain and bearing 100 degree plus temperatures, the Curry family and their friends and neighbors seem to have lost all hope in the way of rain.

While her father, H. C. Curry, still holds his trust in mother nature, Lizzy Curry has lost hers and also trust in herself. Lizzy is unmarried at the age of twenty seven and considers herself plain, not worthy for any man and destined for a life of spinsterhood.

But into the drought-beset region comes a stranger who brings a promise of rain. "When I leave there's the sound of rain . . ." said Bill Starbuck, the rainmaker. Desperate for rain, Mr. Curry gives Starbuck one hundred dollars to bring rain, despite the protests of Lizzie and the oldest son Noah. "What kind of rain would you like . . . drizzle, sprinkle, trickle, April showers . . . or the biggest of all, a deluge?" asked Starbuck.

The rainmaker also strikes up a romance with Lizzie. Through his dreams and spell-binding power, he shows Lizzie she's beautiful, restoring her pride in herself.

Rain finally does come to this western area, but whether it was a result of the rainmaker's witchcraft or mother nature is left up to the audience.

Since the play takes place during the late 1930's, music from the period was used during set changes. Several antique farm tools decorated the slats used for the walls of the house. For a breakfast scene, Mr. Curry actually cooked on an old stove, while the aroma of bacon and frying eggs drifted out over the audience.

The Guthrie Theater is based in Minneapolis and is one of the top regional theaters in America. The Ames performance was just one of sixty in thirty-seven cities over a period of ten weeks.

Boy + Girl = Fantasticks

Boy meets girl. Boy and girl fall in love. Boy loses girl. Boy and girl reunite. A basic storyline, but the basis for a warm and tender love story in the world's longest running musical, The Fantasticks. Presented by the Iowa State University Theatre, the production ran February 19-20, 26-27 and March 5-6, 1982 in Fisher Theater.

Luiza and Matt are lovers. Played by Shelley Tharp and Timothy Thomas, the young couple thinks neither of their fathers approve of their mutual admiration. However, the fathers (Darren Grote and Paul Larsen) do approve. They only keep their acceptance a secret to assure a bonding relationship between their children — a bit of child psychology.

The musical, sans elaborate scenery and large cast, "represents the art of the theater," according to Geraldine Maschio, the show's publicity director. "Fantasticks" is not a typical flashy, big production," she said. "It's simple and honest without a chorus of fifty dancers."

Among the cast already mentioned were a mute (John Hackman), a narrator (Michael Pejsach) and an Indian (Mark DeKovic). The two-act performance included popular songs such as "Try to Remember" and "Soon It's Going to Rain." It also featured guest directing and musical staging by D. J. Maloney, a New York professional.

Maloney, manager and artistic director of the Brooklyn Theatre, has directed many off-Broadway musicals and composed several musical revues, with songs from Cole Porter and George Gershwin. He is currently composing the music for a stage version of the popular film, "Bad News Bears."

Modern Dance: It Can Be Anything

Up, down, bend in, swing out. The six legs moved precisely to the Japanese-style music in "Extending Profiles," Barjche's opening number. The annual dance concert, presented February 20 and 21, featured choreographic creations by members of Orchestis I, ISU's modern dance club, the ISU dance faculty and guest performer Marla Cheng.

Director Dana Schumacher worked to ensure a "balanced program." The result: Barjche's thirteen diverse pieces, which varied in style as well as in tone.

Three flouncy-skirted dancers leapt and twirled in "That Country Feeling," a high-energy dance set against a bright pink background. Lighting played an important role in "Fathom" as it illuminated postures causing the dancers to appear almost inhuman.

While many dancers utilized classical music, the clicking shoes of three tap dancers paired with a male dancer's vocal solo to accompany "Nervous Energy." Donned in practice leotards and leg warmers, the dancers in "With Love to Twyla" performed to vocal as well as the piano accompaniment of Evelyn Jensen.

The dances had varying themes also. Spies took the stage in "Undercover Eyes," snoopy, self-righteous gossips were portrayed in "The Backfence Rag," and "Tea Time Swing" featured couples bopping to static 40's music.

Commenting about persons who had never attended a prior modern dance concert, Schumacher said, "They don't realize modern dance can be humorous, silly, and fun, as well as serious. It can be anything, really."

With a list of choreographic and dance accomplishments behind her, Cheng surprised the audience by simply walking onto the well-lit stage in a black leotard. "In the beginning, I was taught curves," she said clearly. "Antecedents (1981)" proceeded with Cheng alternately demonstrating movements and talking of her past, her family, New York and dance.

This dance contrasted to "Front and Center," which followed the show's intermission. As the dance began, the stage curtains were fully open and the house lights of C. Y. Stephens Auditorium were on. In the wings dancers stretched and reviewed movements, and technicians worked on lighting.

Someone called "Places, dancers." The house lights went down. The curtain moved in. The coat-and-tail costumes hanging in a corner were put on. The music boomed. And the dancers danced. The audience viewed the transformation from backstage warm-ups to concert-polished performance in "Front and Center."

Before the first dancers took the stage during Barjche's opening night, the thirteen dancers had already completed this concert-polishing transformation, and a backstage warm-up wasn't necessary.

What do a smart-aleck dummy, dancing nuns and monks and a group of aspiring actors and actresses have in common? They were all part of the 1982 Varieties Sweepstakes. Held February 19 and 20, this was the 50th anniversary of the Varieties Sweepstakes.

Varieties gives Iowa State students the chance to show off their talents in acting, singing and directing a production. Ventriloquist Dave Krahlung and his "friend" Clyde were the emcees for the sweepstakes. Clyde kept the audience laughing with his comments and singing, including his version of "The Auctioneer's Song." Krahlung took the stage alone at one point, portraying mythical farmer Bill Schultz and singing "Nevada Nell" to the tune of the popular country song, "Sioux City Sue."

The first place skit award went to Murphy, Palmer, Noble and Woodrow houses. This was the first time dorm houses had performed a skit in Varieties.

The skit, titled "Unconventional Souls," revolves around a secretary bored with her work. She decides to visit her sister at the convent, helping the nuns and monks with their song for a singing contest and putting a little kick in the convent.

The first place vignette award was won by "The Renditions." This octet, made up of four men and four women, resembled the popular singing group Manhattan Transfer in their style and sound.

Other vignettes were performed by soloist Brenda Dewitt and Mike Cowman, a duet with Lori Shimp and Bill Nelson and impressionist Brent Aitchison.

"Upstaged Stars" was the title of a skit performed by Chi Omega and Phi Delta Theta. The final skit of the evening was "Adam and Eve Bite the Big Apple," presented by Delta Zeta and Delta Upsilon.

Iowa State Went for That

Cold March winds blew outside Hilton Coliseum, but Daryl Hall and John Oates warmed the atmosphere inside with contemporary rock and roll, March 24, 1982.

Priming the audience for their most recent album, Private Eyes, opened the Hall and Oates performance. "How Does It Feel to Be Back" off the Voices LP and "Diddy Doo Wop," a "real New York City song" as described by Hall, followed.

Reminiscent of the past, the duo treated the crowd to a couple of their earlier hits, "Rich Girl" and "She's Gone."

Hall and Oates kept their audience wondering what song might be played next, giving them hit after hit. And the hits kept coming, maintaining the crowd's enthusiasm with such familiar numbers as "Kiss On My List," "I Can't Go For That," "Private Eyes" and "Sarah Smile."

For a little variety, Hall and Oates gave their listeners their rendition of an old Smokey Robinson tune "Goin' to a Go Go" and the Righteous Brothers' hit "You've Lost That Loving Feeling," which is recorded on Hall and Oates' Voices album.

The twosome's back-up band included a number of colorful characters including Charlie DeChant on saxophone and G. E. Smith on lead guitar. Smith, when introduced, entertained the audience with his solo version of "Somewhere Over the Rainbow."

The group did not leave without an encore and the audience wouldn't let them go without hearing the groups 1981 summer hit "You Make My Dreams."

Hilton Coliseum could have easily been mistaken for a honky-tonk set deep in the heart of Texas on Friday, April 16, as Willie Nelson and warm-up band Delbert McClinton came to Ames. Cowboy boots, Nikes and penny loafers all tapped in beat with such Nelson standards as "Good Hearted Woman," "Mama Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to be Cowboys," and "Georgia."

Without saying a word, Nelson and his band took the stage and led the concert off to a successful start with his popular "Whiskey River," followed by "Stay all Night." The introduction pulled the crowd to their feet. They didn't remain standing through the entire concert, but they showed their appreciation and enthusiasm in many other ways. A variety of cowboy hats and even an ISU baseball cap were thrown onto the performing stage and Nelson shed his bandana to try the hats on for size. At one point during the concert a banner was paraded around the coliseum reading "Welcome to Ames Bill Nelson."

Nelson's lack of dialogue with the audience didn't seem to faze them in the least. They simply sat back and listened to the country sounds of Nelson and family.

For an encore the band did a medley of religious songs including "Will the Circle be Unbroken" and "Amazing Grace." It seems only proper that the lone star flag of Texas dropped over the group as they performed their closing songs "Luckenbach Texas" and "Whiskey River," which ended the evening off just right for the near sell-out crowd at Hilton.

Kerry Dague

Nelson's lack of dialogue during the concert went virtually unnoticed by fans who just sat back and listened to Nelson play his after his. He did take a little time out to try on an ISU hat for size.

The Best Little Whorehouse

CENSORED

They sure weren't selling Tupperware in The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas, performed April 16-17, 1982 in C. Y. Stephens Auditorium.

The musical, as the title implies, dealt with a "respectable" whorehouse and its occupants. All set deep within the heart of Texas in the early 1970's.

The "Chicken Ranch," as it was commonly called, had been sort of a tradition in the Texas town and was under the direction of Miss Mona Stangley (Darleigh Miller). The town sheriff, Ed Earl Dodd (Christopher Wynkoop) looked the other way and the ranch was enjoying a successful season. However, one day the nasty "watchdog," Melvin P. Thorpe (Jason Byce), decided to put an end to this house of ill-repute. He shocked the state by revealing "that Texas has a whorehouse in it." Because of his close association with Miss Mona, Sheriff Dodd can't be persuaded to close the ranch. Finally, the governor, a regular customer himself, must reluctantly step in to end the whorehouse's operation.

The four sellout crowds found the sexual implications present in the play surprising, yet presented in such a manner that the crowd found themselves laughing continuously.

Such lines as Miss Mona's "Men aren't all bad — only ninety-two percent" brought a murmur of disapproval from the men. As all male eyes wandered from one of Mona's scantily-clad girls to the next, the women enjoyed the sights of the Aggie football players dressing for a night at the ranch.

There truly was something for everyone at Peter Masterson and Tommy Tune's production of The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas, as it fulfilled the desires of both males and females alike.

Bach Gets No Respect

IOWA STATE CENTER

Photos by Klaus Roehrer

The audience was in a good mood as they waited for the P.D.Q. Bach concert to begin, and chuckled as the first chair violinist tuned the ISU Symphony three times to stall for time. Dr. Peter Schickele, who came running down the aisle late for his own concert, bills himself as a professor of musical pathology at the University of Southern North Dakota at Hoople. He claims to have discovered some music written by P.D.Q. Bach, a long lost son of J. S. Bach, who probably should have stayed lost. The professor has collected and edited his music, and now tours the country making it available to concert-goers everywhere.

Schickele and the ISU Symphony conductor, Dr. Lawrence Burkhalter, directed the orchestra in pieces that were hilarious satire of classical music. When the audience expected a certain chord or last note, it wasn't there, and all kinds of plagiarized melodies sneaked in. It was intended to shock or surprise the listeners whose ears had been trained to expect certain things from classical music.

Besides the music, there were lots of antics going on. Anything that could possibly go wrong to disrupt the dignity and order of a concert did: the conductor dropped his music, the podium collapsed, music stands fell over, and Dr. Burkhalter held out for more pay before he would conduct. The first piece, the "Desecration of the Halls," Overture, was lost and never performed. "The Canine Cantata 'Wachet Art'" ("Sleeping Dogs Awake") featured Schickele dressed up in a dog costume as Dietrich Fischer-Buach, a houndstenoer. In the last "Concerto for Bassoon vs. Orchestra," Dr. Schickele played the bassoon while taking off a piece between each note, until he was left just playing the mouthpiece.

One thing that made this concert especially interesting was the interaction between Dr. Schickele and the audience. He waited for late-arriving people to take their seats, and near the end of the concert asked someone in the audience what time it was. After the concert, the audience kept clapping, forcing Dr. Schickele to reappear six or seven times. Then the packed auditorium began clapping in unison, like at the end of a rock concert. Finally he came out and stopped the audience like a conductor would stop an orchestra. The mischievous spirit of the concert had been caught by the audience.

Chicago Razzles and Dazzles 'em

Skin, sex, booze and "All that Jazz" was what was in store for the audiences of Bob Fosse's Chicago when it was presented by the Union Board Theatre April 22-24, 29-30, May 1 and 5-8.

The Maintenance Shop provided a perfect cabaret setting for the vaudeville musical. A cloud of smoke hung over the stage, the audience was settled in their chairs, pitchers of beer and the scenery of the 1920 Cook County Jail before them — and the plot unfolded.

Velma Kelly (played by Jill Waggoner) and Roxie Hart (played by Andy Finch North) are the merry murderesses of Chicago's jail who strive to elevate from inmates to musical stars with the help of their shady lawyer, Billy Flynn (Dean Schmitz).

Flynn "Razzle Dazzles" and manipulates the press in his quest for the girls' fame, money and power. With Flynn's help the jailhouse's matron, Mamma Morton (Donna Bachman), and the female impersonator radio announcer, Mary Sunshine (D. Ray), the girls achieve their search for fame. Roxie and Velma's popularity reached its peak with the press and the people only to be overshadowed by the fame of yet another ruthless murderess.

Not to be stopped in their climb to the top, Roxie and Velma join forces, and reputations, to work their way back as Chicago's merry murderesses.

Produced and directed by Scott M. Smith, the music, actors and dancers enthralled and captivated the audience with such memorable and dynamic numbers as "Cell Block Tango," "All that Jazz," and Keith Wirtz's "Mr. Cellophane."

Roxie and Velma didn't stay in the minds of the masses, but the excellent performances of the cast of Chicago surely stayed in the minds of the audiences as they left the Shop after a thoroughly entertaining show.

Laura Maurer

Above: Set in the roaring 20's, the play Chicago really showed the decade as it might have been. Complete with garters and fishnet pantyhose, the cast entered the stage. Gina Zeffarano, Monica Zeffarano, Diane Morris, Dean Schmitz, Edith Maxey, Gretchen Potter and Amy Roaks do a little song and dance in this vaudeville musical.

Modern, Mellow and Much More

It was a Wednesday night of Veishea weekend and a small crowd gathered at Hilton Coliseum. While most people were out welcoming in the long weekend, the crowd of 3000 welcomed in Ronnie Milsap, and as Milsap himself warmly exclaimed, "We're having some fun now!"

One time Entertainer of the Year, Ronnie Milsap deserves the recognition he earns by the versatility he displays on stage. His voice was clear and strong as he opened up his show with "What a Difference You Made in My Life." For the next hour and a half he performed everything from Chuck Berry to Elton John to Beethoven. Milsap's rendition of the Pointer Sister's "Fire" was dynamic although a little startling coming from a more C. B. W. entertainer, but as one fan summarized the uniqueness of the entire concert, "I'll bet some cowboys were surprised!"

Smaller audiences are sometimes better to play for because everyone who comes does so because he enjoys the entertainer, not because the entertainer is a big name. The audience on April 28 definitely knew what the man had to offer. People were on their feet most of the time and even the slow ballad "Desperado" didn't mellow them out. Occasional fireworks exploded, which added a spark to the fire and the enthusiasm spread from the floor into the bleachers. People were ready for him when he sang his most popular tunes, "Smoky Mountain Rain" and "There Ain't No Getting Over Me." His final song of the set was "America the Beautiful" which brought the entire crowd to its feet. Adorned with a purple spotlight, Milsap belted out lyrics which gave everyone goosebumps. As the final chord rang out, the spotlight left him, and focused on the huge flag hanging proudly in the auditorium. People are still patriotic — given the chance.

Ronnie Milsap gave his encore wearing an ISU T-shirt. He bursted out with "Elijah," "Burning Ring of Fire," and "Great Balls of Fire" leaving the crowd with the fulfillment of an excellent show.

Milsap smiled, "I like being happy. I am happy being here with ya'll in Ames, Iowa." Everyone was happy he was there.

Keaggy — Just What the Audience Ordered

Mention the word concert, and most ISU students immediately think of Hilton Coliseum. But those students would have missed a fine performance in the Memorial Union on April 27, 1982. On that day Phil Keaggy and Band came to entertain ISU.

Keaggy was brought to campus by Rod and Staff Productions, and he gave the audience just what they came for — a polished performance. Keaggy is a renowned guitarist, and the over 800 in attendance frequently acknowledged his talents with applause. He is best known for his electric lead playing, but is equally gifted in classical guitar playing. Both are merged in his own style of melodic jazz.

Keaggy played a variety of songs from his more than ten years in the recording business, including tunes from his latest album, Town to Town. Keaggy's concerts are somewhat contemporary Christian in style, but that didn't bother students who just came for an evening of good instrumental music.

For the students not waiting for the next concert at Hilton, Phil Keaggy provided an excellent show at an excellent price.

Charley's What?

It is hard to know quite what to expect from Brandon Thomas' Charley's Aunt. Throughout the show one soon discovered to expect the most unexpected. It's a farcical play with situations evolving spontaneously and sometimes without clear reasoning behind them.

The show opened in the room of college student Jack Chesney (played by Ken Fessell) at Oxford University in 1892.

He is found pondering over his writing table, wondering what "dear sweet words" to write to his lovely Kitty Verdun (Kelli Hamlow). Jack soon finds that his friend Charley Wykeham (Gregory Penn) is experiencing the same trouble writing to his girl, Amy Spettigue (Cara Hoppes).

What was amusing during this scene were the many interruptions from Butler Brassett, played by Brad Barnes. His continuous drawn out replies of "Yes, sir" and his overly stiff body were so utterly unrealistic and absurd, that it was hard not to chuckle.

The audience began to loosen up as Tim Wall presented his character of Lord Fancourt Babberley. And was he ever a character. Everyone laughed the moment he walked on stage.

When he realized he was to dress up as Charley's Aunt, Donna Lucia D'Alvadorez, the show finally started to bring the house down with constant laughter. Prancing around in his long black dress and curly locks wig, he got roars from the audience.

Hamlow and Hoppes carried off the character of Kitty and Amy with composure and class. This, teamed with the elegance and style of the girls' dresses and matching bonnets, led to a stunning effect.

The British dialect the actors used throughout the show was mastered exceptionally well. The accents brought about an air of dignity to what was otherwise a rather zany and humorous show.

Charley's Aunt was a play to go see to simply have a few laughs, let loose and become a little zany yourself.

Sea Horse

They call themselves the Iowa State Players. This group consists of a handful of ISU student actresses and actors who decided to strike out on their own to expand their acting horizons because they felt restricted by the schedule and format of the Iowa State University Theatre productions. Their first production, "The Sea Horse," a play by Edward J. Moore, came off without a hitch. The play was performed at the Octagon Arts Center in downtown Ames.

The setting for the play is a small California coast bar that serves the sailors from the ported merchant ships. The first act opens with the proprietor of the bar, Gertrude Blum (played by Laura I. Runyan), mopping down the bar room floor after closing. She is interrupted by loud pounding and yelling at the front door. After a few moments, she reluctantly lets Harry Bales (played by Rodney Armentrout) in from the pouring rain. Throughout the rest of the night, Harry and Gertrude involve themselves in an intense personal drama, full of ranging emotions. The problem is that neither will admit his or her genuine affection for the other. Harry is bound by his roguish shipmates who tease him about his relationship with Gertrude, and Gertrude is concerned about the past repeating itself. After an hour of laughter, tears, threats and lovemaking, the first act closes.

The second and final act opens on the same setting in the morning at the Sea Horse bar. Harry wakes up early and begins to fix breakfast for Gertrude and himself. Gertrude soon appears in a freshly ironed dress that Harry has set out for her to wear. The tense emotions that existed the night before are carried over to the morning. Slowly, each begins to reveal his or her shortcomings in the relationship. Once again, the stage is filled with a rage and passion that both Runyan and Armentrout mastered in their portrayal of the two characters. Gertrude and Harry, Harry finally proposes marriage to Gertrude, but she violently rejects him and throws him out of the bar. Both stand alone, Harry outside the door and Gertrude busied behind the bar; their faces exhibit the pain within. Suddenly, Harry rushes back in to Gertrude and the matter is settled that they will marry.

Although the play is characteristic of a happy-ending love story, Gertrude and Harry leave the audience in suspense right up to the very end. The play definitely enhanced the cast and crew's artistic talents. Both Rodney Armentrout and Laura Runyan played the two roles with ample ability and enthusiasm. The entire production staff should be applauded for their skill and determination in their efforts to break away from ISU to exhibit their creative talents.

When Love and Life are Blind

Some say love is blind. It certainly was for Don Baker, the hero of Leonard Gershe's contemporary comedy/drama Butterflies are Free. The hit play was presented as part of ISU Theatre's summer program July 9-10 and 16-17 and also opened the fall season August 27-28. The program was presented in Fisher Theatre and was directed by faculty member Geraldine Maschio.

Butterflies are Free tells the story of a boy (David Krull) who, in search of maturity and independence, leaves home and an over-protective mother. If the plot sounds familiar, this play has one significant difference — the boy is blind.

In order to make blindness appear as realistic as possible on stage, an actual blind student, Mary Keener, worked with the cast. To prepare for his role as the blind hero, Don Baker, senior David Krull learned to find his way around campus with the aid of a white cane.

Krull said the absence of sight increased his other senses. "Suddenly I became aware of sounds and scents that I never paid any attention to before." Krull added that even the insides of the buildings "smelled differently."

The real challenge for Krull came during rehearsals for the show. He had to rehearse blindfolded and commented that he bumped into things for a few days before he learned where everything was. While Krull was learning how to "act" blind the other members of the cast worked with Keener on learning how to react to a blind person.

Director Maschio said of Keener, "She helped us better understand blindness and how people react to it. That understanding is a very important to doing this show."

Playwright Leonard Gershe based the character of Don Baker on Harold Krents, a lawyer who is blind. Despite his handicap, Krents was classified 1A by the selective service and drafted. He took the matter with such good humor when interviewed by the media that Gershe instantly saw possibilities for a comedy written around Krents' character.

Another friend of the playwright, Mia Farrow, served as the inspiration for Jill Tranner, an aspiring but spacy actress who lives in the apartment adjacent to Don. It is Jill (Kelli Sue Hamlow) who provides him with the understanding and love he can't get from his mother. Mother unfortunately arrives at an inconvenient moment to find them sleeping together in Don's loft.

Despite Mother's demand that her son return home, Don attempts to continue his relationship with Jill. But the actress is unable to make the kind of commitment Don so desperately needs and turns her attention to a hippie theatre director (Stephen Collie) who offers her career opportunities. The ultimate working out of Jill and Don's relationship (under Mother's disapproving watch) provides the basis for a romantic comedy that also has a great deal to say about the handicaps we all, in some way or another, have.

Mention the name of Lawrence Welk and the picture it evokes is of millions of patient, loyal and loving fans devoted to a man who can aptly be described as a show business tradition.

Welk returns the affection and knows how to keep the love affair hot. On June 6, 1982, Ames area Welk fans were treated to an evening of professional showmanship at its best.

Bob Raeston's preconcert antics at the piano warmed up an already receptive crowd for further numbers by the Welk veterans.

From "Everything's Coming Up Roses," performed by the entire Welk troupe decked out in rose colored gowns and suits, to a vigorous, foot-stomping rendition of the show's final number, "South Rampart Street Parade," the Welk clan proved it knows how to keep an audience happy and pleased.

Crowd pleasers during the evening included the Gail Farelle Trio's snappy version of "In the Mood," and Myron Floren's lighthearted tickling "Tico Tico" on the accordion. A footwork competition among top artists Arthur Duncan, Bobby Burgess and Jack Emeraea, who danced to an upbeat version of "Sweet Georgia Brown," drew enthusiastic applause from the audience. Naturally, a Lawrence Welk show wouldn't be complete without a bubble blowing number and Lawrence Welk and Mary Lou Metzger obliged the crowd by expertly waltzing to the music of "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles" as shimmering bubbles floated overhead.

It's a safe bet this is one entertainment headliner who will have a difficult time trying to retire. Ames fans would welcome him back any time.

Summertime is the season for love, lust, and, yes, even an affair or two. Or, for Barney Cashman in Neil Simon's comedy Last of the Red Hot Lovers, at least an attempt at having one, even if it means as unlikely a place as his mother's apartment.

From the floral couch and matching armchair in the center of the room to the various photos and plants to the pale green walls and the dining table perfectly set for the unexpected guest, the set in ISU Theatre's production seemed just right for the apartment of an older woman.

Last of the Red Hot Lovers presented a variety of humorous characters for a mixed audience to enjoy in Fischer Theatre. Patrick Gouran, professor in the speech department, had the right physique to play a perfect Barney: rather short, slim and jolly. From careful removal of his gloves on entrance, to his edging along the wall close to the dining room shades, Gouran's precise movements kept the audience watching and chuckling.

Barney's first attempt at an affair occurs with callous and cool Elaine Navazio, portrayed by Toby Kemp. Clad in leather skirt and boots, her slightly sexy swing gave her a noticeable seductive air.

Ann Kline

In this scene Barney explains to Elaine that he is looking for one memorable affair. But, unfortunately, Elaine's "slam bam thank-you ma'am" attitude is too much for Barney.

Barney's attempt at affair number two is with spunky but psychopathic Bobbi Michele, played by Amy Rooks. Dressed in feathers down to her knees and a headband across her long black hair, her hippie look fits her role well.

During this scene the focus is mainly on Rooks, for the simple reason that Barney can't get a word in edgewise.

Rooks really grabs the audience in the scene where Bobbi attempts to get Barney high. With Barney's paranoia about his tongue going numb and his heart stopping, while Bobbi sits in oblivion, the actions between the two of them became hilarious. After this experience it's strike two for Barney.

But he doesn't give up. By now Barney is a pro. He changes from his conservative blue suit to a plaid sports jacket and seems ready for anything. Even for pessimistic Jeanette Fincher, played by Darla Germeroth.

Jeanette arrives clutching her pocketbook with a very glum look on her face. After a two-minute silence she suddenly bursts into a crying fit because her husband is having an affair. The way Germeroth drags out her words is so depressingly funny that it caused contagious laughter in the audience.

By the end of the act, it becomes increasingly apparent that Barney's "love" sofa is turning into an analyst's couch. Jeanette finally breaks down and admits that she still loves her husband. This last attempt turns out to be strike number three for Barney, but he finally comes to his senses and realizes his life is not really cut out for affairs — except between himself and his wife.

Director David Havela did a marvelous job of choosing a cast that fit the characters he had in mind. They were all funny in their own way. The audience was definitely offered a mixture of lessons and laughs in love with ISU's production of Last of the Red Hot Lovers.

Jeanette needs comforting because she has found out her husband is having an affair. This leads to a surprise ending for the audience.

Cool weather during the first week of June welcomed summer school students, Ames residents and MURST — the Memorial Union Resident Summer Theatre. Theatre fans, both young and old, escaped the summer heat to share wine, cheese and crackers in the Maintenance Shop while they enjoyed the MURST season that promised to be better than ever.

The '82 season, under the direction of performing arts director Scott M. Smith, opened on a sweet summer evening, June 3, with the musical comedy Pippin. Pippin's dazzling script and score follows the eighth century quest for fulfillment of Pippin, the oldest son of Charlemagne, the Holy Roman Emperor.

The stage was set for magic, music and comedy. David Ambrosio was particularly outstanding in the leading role as Pippin, who sings his way through a world of war and meaningless relationships in search for peace and happiness.

While searching for the true life, Pippin asks Grandmother Berthe for advice. Berthe, played by Amy Rooks, charmed the audience as she told Pippin to look for the simple life in the song "No Time At All." She tells him to take life as it comes rolling along. She tells Pippin and the audience that it's time to start living and to take time to discover your dreams. Pippin soon learns that home is where the heart is and the magic he is looking for is only inside his head. And he finds his contentment in a simple yet surprising place.

The second production of the season gave Scott M. Smith, director of MURST, the chance to appear on stage instead of being hidden behind the scenes.

Ira Levin's Veronica's Room, presented June 17-26, was a tense thriller which kept the audience on the edge of their seats. In this suspenseful murder, onlookers were warned never to talk to strangers. The family servants John (Scott M. Smith) and Maureen (Laura Runyan) show a young couple, Susan (Lou Ann Tappe) and Larry (Rodney Armentrout), Veronica's room and memories of her. They also add that Susan looks a lot like Veronica. The servants are able to con Susan into joining them in their mad jigsaw puzzle.

As the second act begins, Susan finds she has entered into a stage of illusion. The time is 1935 and Veronica is alive and well. Susan discovers that by complying with the servants she has stepped into the psycho world of Veronica. And never again will Susan speak to strangers as she becomes Veronica's next victim.

Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat brought an uplifting spirit to the audience from July 1-10. This is a contemporary Broadway hit, inspired by the Old Testament tale of Joseph and his multicolored coat. The show turns the ancient tale into a rollicking potpourri of vaudeville tunes, country and western, calypso, 50's rock and roll and 70's hard rock.

The Narrator (David Ambrosio) delightfully tells the story of Joseph and how he is given the amazing technicolor dreamcoat by his father, Jacob. This annoys his eleven brothers, and they plot that the dreamer has to go. Joseph vows to rise above all his brothers.

Left: Bob Priestley, as Joseph, renews in his technicolor dreamcoat. The high-energy musical left a good feeling with the audience, and they fled out of the Maintenance Shop humming each note. Below: The Search of Egypt (Mark Gruber) strikes back his har for an Elvis Presley imitation. Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat featured a variety of musical styles as it put the Old Testament story of Joseph in music.

Joseph does rise above his brothers by meeting the spectacular Pharaoh (Mark Gruber). Joseph stands before the mighty Pharaoh and uses his ability of interpreting dreams to gain his freedom from slavery. Joseph becomes a favorite of the Pharaoh after explaining what all the dreams mean. Pharaoh makes Joseph rich and successful.

After hearing of Joseph's success, his brothers come begging for food and forgiveness. Joseph shares his food with them, but one of them steals his golden cup. Joseph gets ready to sell his own cup. Joseph gets ready to sell his own cup, but suddenly he remembers what it was like. So instead, he saves his brother. And as the colors fade into the darkness, any dream will do in this soft rock fantasy.

Whose Life Is It Anyway?, performed July 15-24, allowed each member of the audience to visit his or her destined hospital wing by following the yellow, blue and red lines into the Maintenance Shop. This moving drama focused on an individual's right to control her own destiny. After suffering a ruptured spinal cord in a car accident, Claire Harrison, an artist, learns she will never walk or use her arms again.

Following a five month hospital stay, Harrison, played by Joan Renken, decides she doesn't want to live anymore. But the doctors feel they have a responsibility to save lives. Harrison refuses this reasoning and battles the medical, legal and moral codes for the right to die.

Her wishes are simple. She wants to die quietly with dignity. She pleads with a judge stating that her body is already dead and her mind is also slowly dying. She wins her case as the judge sets her free in a sensitive look at an individual's right to die.

As the warm summer came to a close, so did MURST Company as they ended with the hot production of I Love My Wife, presented July 27-August 7.

In this adult musical two normal middle class couples who went to high school together decide to plunge into the world of liberated sexuality. Wally (Mark Gruber) tries to liberate his friend Alvin (Rodney Armentrout), telling him that he has to break tradition by becoming sexually liberated. Alvin then tries to convince his wife Cleo (Maria Osborn) that they need to become part of the liberated world. He says Cleo needs to broaden her spectrum and become sexually free.

On Christmas Eve, Wally and Monica (Marguerite Bennett Floger) prepare dinner for Alvin and Cleo. But before dinner is over the two couples decide it's time to take the plunge. The results are hilariously portrayed through beguiling tunes, saucy lyrics and slapstick comedy. This marriage of laughs and fun makes the audience feel good about being faithfully married in today's society.

And if these productions weren't enough, the entire MURST company joined together in creating and performing completely original shows called the Follies. The shows, held on Fridays and Saturdays throughout the summer at 11 p.m., featured a wide variety of songs, dances and skits both serious and humorous for all types of late-night people.

MURST '82 promised to be better than ever. And it was, as the season left its audience fulfilled and anticipating another summer of MURST.

Ames Night Life – A Real BARgain

You've got some free time and have decided to go out and have a few beers. Where do you go to have a good time in Ames? This is a dilemma facing many ISU students.

For a relatively small midwestern city, Ames has a variety of night club entertainment available to its college community that is equal to that of many larger cities.

There seems to be an atmosphere in Ames bars that will cater to anyone's particular mood.

For those who want to spend a quiet evening, Wutzunder is near campus and often offers live entertainment. Its rustic decor and variety of unusual drinks draw both students and residents alike. It is not uncommon to walk in and find a guitarist playing an old folk song while couples match wits at a game of backgammon. The bar and restaurant combination at Thumbs Up offers a getaway type atmosphere perfect for taking a date or talking with a friend. You can even have the bartender throw an album to help set the mood.

Naturally, some of the most frequented bars in Ames are those where "everybody goes." Grand Daddy's and the Mississippi Queen are two of the large clubs offering music, dancing and lots of people. Both offer plenty of things to keep you entertained, with pool tables, video games and plenty of room to dance. The MQ hosts live bands, from old rock and roll to new wave, with occasional appearances by name bands. Grand Daddy's offers a disc jockey spinning Top 40 and requests, and sets aside one night a week for "country" music to keep all of the "suburban" cowboys of Ames dancing.

For something different, Ames has several nightspots that stand apart. The Maintenance Shop, inside the Memorial Union, has an array of musical entertainment that encompasses all interests. From bluegrass to folk and blues to contemporary music, the Shop's shows have been filmed and shown all across the country and around the world. They also offer some fine theatre and dance.

For those who wish to get a combination of all the features of nightlife, Tuesday Night Live at Dugan's Deli is a unique experience. "Come as you are" is Dugan's clothing philosophy. There are more varieties of beer on tap than you could possibly try in an evening. On Tuesdays, when few people seem to be out and about, Dugan's is packed with people waiting to hear whatever band may be playing. It's not unusual to see people dancing on their chairs or in the aisles. Dugan's fans don't seem to fit into any mold; they come from all walks.

Whatever your preference, Ames bars can satisfy every desire. So to answer the question, "Where can I go?", you can try them all and find the one where you fit in best.

Michael Reilly

Above: The Mississippi Queen, or MQ for short, features a large dance floor for dancing to the music of some of the Midwest's top bands. The scarcity of open tables attests to the popularity of the MQ, which keeps students flocking to the bar with specials such as refillable mugs.

Students Escape to

Those buildings that have been popping up in camptown, where students are spending many afternoons and many quarters, aren't called laundromats. They're called video arcades. And inside those arcades lies a world into which college students love to escape — the challenging world of video games.

In the past two years, three new arcades have opened up in camptown. And in each one, the majority of customers are between the ages of eighteen and twenty-two. These college students come from a wide variety of backgrounds, but they all seem to have one thing in common. They love to play these machines.

Some simply go to escape. After a rough night of studying, setting your mind on something other than the books is one way to relax before trying to sleep. Others go for the challenge. Outwitting a computer does great things for one's ego, and if classes are getting you down, at least you feel like you're on your way to mastering something.

Some players go for the competition and love to just spend an hour playing against their friends for fun. The opposite type would rather go to an arcade alone and not compete against anything but the machine.

Bars in Ames are adding video games to their decor now, along with the usual pool tables and foosball tables that they've had in the past. So now you can play your favorite game without leaving the bars and going to an arcade.

The current video craze on college campuses looks like it's here to stay. Even though money is tight for college students, ... it seems like they will always have one more quarter to spend on their favorite game.

Judy Klas

Above right: Many video arcades require that tokens, small metal slugs the size of a quarter, be used in the machines. The face of the machine that exchanges quarters for tokens is a common accessory mixed in with the electronic games. Below: The bright colors, flashing lights and strange noises attract people much the way a cover attracts people to a book. It is the challenge of the game that keeps them coming back. Below right: Quick hands, eye-hand coordination and a lot of quarters are some of the recommended items for a trip to the video arcade. These things can always be developed with a little, or a lot, of practice. Photos by Klaus Kocher

Make Way For Neil Diamond!

The Fourth of July arrived early in Ames this year. Or at least so it seemed for the 14,000 plus fans who attended the Neil Diamond concert on May 17.

Amidst a burst of "firefly" lights, firecrackers, exploding fireworks and a gigantic American flag which unfurled behind the stage, Diamond opened his concert with "America" from The Jazz Singer. And from that first rousing song of patriotism until his closing number, it was an evening of song and celebration.

Diamond, who is more than forty years old, has been drawing crowds for more than twenty years. His age-spanning popularity was evidenced by the audience, which ranged from five years to the over-sixty crowd — all of whom were on their feet swaying to the music within minutes.

A new Hilton record was set when all available seats were sold out in less than twelve hours, most of them selling for fifteen dollars a seat. But within days after ticket sales closed, scalpers were advertising those same tickets for one hundred dollars or more.

Much to the delight of his fans, Diamond included a complete range of his songs, from his early "Kentucky Woman" and "Sweet Caroline" to his more recent hits including "You Don't Bring Me Flowers" and songs from his movie, The Jazz Singer.

For two-and-a-half non-stop hours, Diamond kept his audience satisfied — singing the most popular of his songs which have become a part of modern American music history. One moment he would have the fans stomping in the aisles to a rousing version of "Dancin'." Then just as suddenly, the frenzied audience settled in to an almost eerie silence as he sang the mellow title song from The Jazz Singer.

While some performers seem to forget those seated behind the stage which was dubbed by Diamond as "the bun section — the best seats in the house", Diamond serenaded them several times during the evening. As he would slowly turn to look over an area of the coliseum, applause and screams could be heard wherever his glance fell.

One young mother's admiration could be held back no longer. As Diamond began "Forever in Blue Jeans," she broke through the crowds and headed toward Diamond, where her daughter-in-arms presented him with a long-stemmed rose.

From the banjo-pluckin' music of "Robert E. Lee" to the good-'ol-gospel hand-clapping and foot-stomping of "Rise Jordan," Diamond lived up to his reputation as a notable American performer and song writer. Diamond music celebrated American life — from the street sounds of New York in "A Beautiful Noise" to the spine tingling revival spirit of "Brothers Love's Travelin' Salvation Show."

And when the evening ended in another burst of fireworks, and an explosion of confetti there was no doubt in the minds of the concert goers that this is what music should do — celebrate life.

Mom, apple pie and the flag ... move over! Make way for the newest addition to your all-American family of symbols — Neil Diamond.

A First-rate Second City

Cecil wasn't very outgoing with girls, so his friends bought him the newest video game cassette, which brings a singles bar into your living room. The object is to score points by picking up Linda, the computer. It isn't as easy as it seems. If you hesitate, get caught in a lie, or fall for a woman's tricks, Linda will drop you and score a point. Clearly man is no match for a computer as Linda outscored the men four to one.

From this first routine on, C. Y. Stephens Auditorium echoed with constant laughter as the Second City Troupe performed on Saturday, August 28, 1982. The overflowing audience was treated to a rapid succession of comedy skits separated only by momentary dimming of the stage lights.

The performers professed a love for improvisation and asked for starting ideas. The audience promptly gave them "kibbles and bits" and "spatula." Each comedian took turns weaving part of a story involving these elements. Another improvisational game started with two performers acting out a creative impulse. Upon thinking of a brilliant one-liner, a third performer would yell "Freeze!" and assume the position of one of the original actors to give his line and so on.

In another skit, "President Reagan" gave a press conference. Students were advised to keep questions "monosyllabic" due to the "President's" advanced age. He answered many questions of national importance, but became understandably upset when asked, "Where's Bonzo?"

The troupe kept the show close to home by frequently mentioning fraternities and staging an Ames PTA meeting with a lively discussion on whether sex education belonged in school.

One routine involved a wake for a loving, but stupid, husband. The mourners, including the priest, couldn't keep from laughing upon learning the man died of suffocation in a gallon can of pork and beans. The wife was upset that she didn't get him to the can opener in time and reminisced about his last words, "Honey, I think there's beans in there."

The two hour performance ended with the comedians inviting the audience to Chicago, where the Second City Troupe is based. For the chance to see such a hilarious show, the audience just might take them up on the invitation.

"Come with me into my imagination," beckons Miguel de Cervantes as he tells the tale of Don Quixote for the 1962 Stars Over Veishea (SOV) production, Man of La Mancha. The musical, based on a seventeenth century novel by Cervantes and presented for the first time in the sixty-year history of SOV, was held in C. Y. Stephens Auditorium on April 29-30 and May 1. The cast and staff, composed entirely of students, put on a quality show for visitors and students, who couldn't help but believe in the "impossible dream."

Cervantes (James McCarrmond) is imprisoned during the Spanish Inquisition and is put on trial by his fellow prisoners. In his defense he offers the story of Don Quixote (Cervantes) and his servant, Sancho Panza (Todd Kemmerer), using his prisonmates for actors. The aging Don Quixote roams the countryside in search of honorable deeds to perform in a time when knights are obsolete. He slays dragons which turn out to be windmills and is always on guard against the Enchanter, who might force reality upon him.

The two adventurers happen upon an inn, where Don Quixote falls in love with a tramp, Aldonza (Lynn McSurely). He sees her as the fair maiden, Dulcinea. Due to his chivalrous treatment, Aldonza realizes she can be a respectable lady.

The dream of a knight and his lady is shattered by Don Quixote's friends and relatives, who believe an old man should not carry on so. One of them poses as the Enchanter in his suit of mirrors and forces Don Quixote to look into reality, where knights don't exist. With his dream taken from him, he loses the will to live and retires to his deathbed.

Sancho and Aldonza, however, have not forgotten the dream and urge Don Quixote to again take up his knightly quest. He rises from his bed, once again believing in the power of a dream. The prisoners, and audience as well, are left with that final inspiration while Miguel de Cervantes is led off to face the Inquisition.

And they danced the night away

After thirty hours of dancing, the 1,360 students who participated in the ISU Muscular Dystrophy Marathon were practically exhausted; but thanks to them $82,000 in pledges were collected to help fight muscular dystrophy.

Their hard work also made ISU's dance marathon one of the top fund-raisers among the nation's colleges and universities for 1982. In the last five years ISU's dance marathon has contributed more than $375,000 to the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

Student involvement in the marathon wasn't limited to dancing. Special appearances were made by the ISU Jazz Band and the Tae-Kwon-Do club. And the ISU Pep Band and Pom Pom squad also came to cheer on the dancers.

In addition, students provided much of the labor in setting up before and cleaning up after the marathon. Many fraternities and sororities lent a helping hand by donating and preparing food for the dancers.

And no dance marathon could be a dance marathon without music. This year's marathon had a mix of live bands and recorded music. Disc jockeys from KMGK, KCCQ, KGGG and KPGY kept the dancers going with plenty of music and antics.

Such local band talents as Akasha, Benson, Jeff Brandt and Galaxy, Buckshot, Cruise Control, Renegade, Titan and Wallis spread the dancing fever with a variety of short musical concerts.

The money collected will stay in Iowa to help the families of those with MD, and to further research to find a cure for the dreaded disease. Sixty years ago the heads of the five departments at Iowa State College decided that instead of having separate open houses for each department, they would have an all-college celebration. The celebration consisted of six events: a dance, department open houses, the Night Show (now Stars Over Veishea) and the May Fete. The May Fete was a student-written play, Return of Spring and the coronation of the May Queen.

They probably didn't know it in 1922, but their all-college celebration gave birth to one of ISU's longest running traditions, Veishea.

The name Veishea is an acronym thought up by ISU Professor Frank Paine. It's a combination of the original five departments at ISC — Veterinary Medicine, Engineering, Industrial Science, Home Economics and Agriculture.

Today Veishea, which is made up of nearly thirty events and more than eighty displays, stands out as the largest student-managed festival in the nation. More than 100,000 people traveled to Ames to join in the commemoration of Veishea's sixtieth year.

One of the special moments of Veishea 1982 was the lighting of the Veishea torch after its nine year absence. The torch symbolized the "Flame of Excellence," this year's Veishea theme.

The first Veishea torch was lit in 1952 by President Harry Truman.

Veishea always attracts scores of alumni and this year was no different. One alum who came back for Veishea this year was Wallace McKee, the first general manager for the first Veishea in 1922. McKee served as the parade marshal and also judged the Veishea floats in the originality category.

"Great Moments in History" was the theme of this year's Veishea parade. Seventeen floats entered the six categories of competition. Tau Kappa Epsilon and Delta Delta Delta captured first prize in the large float division.

"Luni Landing" by Sigma Phi Epsilon and Pi Beta Phi won first prize for both the medium and large divisions and the traveling trophy for most overall points.

Dorm houses Noble and Anthony took the top honors in the small float category as well as the president's trophy for humor.

"Tipping the Tea for Liberty" by Pi Kappa Alpha and Chi Omega won the Grand Marshal Award for theme portrayal.

Other competition in the Veishea parade was the marching band contest. The bands, floats and assorted special entries made the largest Veishea parade in history a grand success.

One tradition which has been part of ISU even before the first Veishea is the cherry pie sale. The sale began in 1921 as part of the Home Economics department's open house.

Veishea, with its festivities old and new, may be changing, but its tradition lives on.

"Focus Your View" — These were the words of advice given to high school seniors during Residence Hall Week (RHW) '82 Feb. 28 through March 6 as they focused their views on the residence halls at ISU.

Since its beginning in 1969 RHW has been celebrating and illustrating the ISU residence hall system, one of the top systems in the nation.

RHW is highlighted by senior visitation, as prospective students from all over Iowa and the surrounding states flock to campus to become better acquainted with ISU and the dormitories. High school seniors are hosted by residence hall members and introduced to the college life — whether it be food service, the campus and classrooms, or extracurricular activities. This year 485 seniors took part in senior visitation.

However, RHW is a time for ISU students as well. RHW provides an opportunity for dorm residents to interact and socialize within their halls.

Fireworks, rollerskating, intramurals and house competitions are all part of the week's scheduled events, along with the traditional mess campanian and bar night.

Community programs for RHW included a balloon and popcorn give away at North Grand Mall, and an art display at Brunner Gallery.

Loverboy, one of the new rock bands climbing the record charts, came to celebrate RHW with the cooperation of the ISU Contemporary Concert Committee. Donny Iris' "Love is Like a Rock" warmed up the crowd while the fans eagerly anticipated "Working for the Weekend" with Loverboy.

Family Feud was also a part of the week's events. This year's winners of the contest were Devitt and Stevenson houses of the Richardson Court Association. A men and a women's floor get together and decide upon a theme, and then form a family. The preliminary contests were held at McKay, and the finals were held at the Cave-Inn.

Lancelot of the Towers Residence Association came in first in Name That Tune, as the men of Lancelot tapped their memory banks, and came up with the titles of golden oldies.

Residence Hall Week '82 concluded with an all-university dance, and a total of more than 9,000 students participated in the annual event.

Greeks Share in the Spectrum

The theme "Spectrum of Experiences" indeed does describe Greek Week 1982. In fact, there were many unique components of this year's Greek Week that will make it memorable for all those who participated.

This year for the first time in the history of ISU Greek Week, the co-chairpersons were brother and sister. Jeff and Kim Fiedler of Spencer, Iowa, proved working together can accomplish anything. Kim Fiedler admitted she was a little "skeptical" when she and Jeff first thought of the idea of being co-chairpersons for Greek Week.

But after five months of hard work coordinating the celebration, Kim's skepticism diminished.

"We worked really well together and Greek Week turned out better than we expected," she said.

Greek Week is known for its various competitive events. The College Bowl is a contest which tests participants on all-around knowledge as well as ISU trivia. To win each team must display quickness and give the correct answers. This year's winners were Farmhouse and Kappa Kappa Gamma in the corec division, Kappa Delta in the women's division and Triangle in the men's division.

For the more musically inclined there was the Greek Sing competition. There were four divisions, one for large group and three for small group. Contestants were judged on ability, costumes and body movements.

The event with the most participation during Greek Week was the Greek Olympics. These tests of athletic strength are usually held on sorority circle. This year cold weather and a few thousand snow flakes made it necessary to move the olympics to the Armory.

Teams made up of a fraternity and sorority, or a fraternity and its little sister, competed for high honors in the obstacle course, tug-of-war, the car stuff and many more. Most of the events require a sense of humor, rather than genuine athletic ability.

Greek Week isn't, however, just contests and games.

"Some people think Greek Week is just a time for the Greeks to show off, because all they know about are the things like big parties," Kim Fiedler said.

"There is a serious side to Greek Week. Appreciation Night for the alumni gives the houses a chance to strengthen ties with their alumni members," she added.

Another serious aspect of Greek Week, the convocation. Its purpose is to inform high school seniors about ISU and Greek living through skits and slide shows. The guest speaker at this year's convocation was ISU basketball coach Johnny Orr.

Other Greek Week activities were the twentieth annual blood drive and the service projects.

INSANITY

It's insanity, it's an epidemic — it's spring. Every year it happens. Students on college campuses everywhere kick off their shoes, pull out their Coppertone and head to the great outdoors with frisbee and cooler in hand. And the students at ISU aren't an exception.

The snow has melted, the trees are budding, and ISU comes out of winter hibernation. As the campanile strikes high noon central campus is virtually a sea of bodies as the students swarm out of their classes and head for their spots in the sun.

Spring has come and the students are ready to shed their winter sweaters, pull on their shorts, roll up their sleeves and wrap up another academic year of fun and study at ISU.

If insanity is spring, then summer can only be isolation. While the last of the students trickle out of town, the campus becomes a ghost town compared to the activity that used to be.

The campus, which only days before bustled with activity, is quiet and desolate. A stray student or professor are the only passerby. Beard-shear, once a human maze of students waiting for short term loans sits empty — a janitor's feet echoing in the corridors.

Alone amid the trees and grass, the campanile stands with only Lancelot and Elaine for company. The Memorial Union sits empty, the Maintenance Shop doors are closed, the students and faculty are gone and ISU rests — until next year.

Yes, the men of Cessna house are interested in shapes, cleavages and hair all right, but not on a woman's body. The Cessna men have a fetish for feet.

For nine years the men on the fourth floor in Larch have been pursuing the "beautiful feet" of ISU.

In 1973, for a change of pace from the normal dorm pre-party, the Cessna house members did a spoof on beauty pageants. Rather than appraising a woman's looks and talents, the Cessna men narrowed it down to a foot's looks and talents.

In 1973 the Cessna foot contest was a small floor activity in their den. In '74 the den was overflowing, in '75 they moved it to the dorm lobby — where the contest has been held for the last seven years. This year the Cessna foot contest will be footprinting their 10th anniversary.

The feet participating in the pageant are judged on cleavage, smell, hair on the toes and length of toes, as well as ankle size.

However, one's foot isn't judged on looks alone. The Cessna house members haven't overlooked talent and originality of dress in their quest for the "perfectTOE" foot.

Some past feet have come as playboy bunnies, pompon toes and man foot meets woman foot and with such entertaining skills as strip routines and pompon cheers.

Last year's winners were a group of three, Darlene Varum, Bonnie Kroschell and Cheryl Mueller. The three made the Foxy Lady look dull as they entertained the audience and judges with their own version of burlesque.

The prizes, what else, toe nail clippers!

Second place went to Kelly Applegate as she captured the Cyclone spirit with the ISU fight song. One foot was the goalpost and the other the cardinal and gold.

Gloria Groth and Linda Christian came in third with their interpretation of the ice capades — ballerinas on toe — to the tune of Ice Castles.

The creativity doesn't end with the contestants. The judges also exercise their imagination when dressing for the occasion as their favorite celebrities. Jimmy CarTOE and Ho-TOE-Is TOE-manie are two of the more memorable judges.

Though the contest has always featured girls, the contest isn't limited to females. So boys, kick off your shoes, paint your toes and get your foot in the door.

American Natives Powwow in Sunroom

Quill work, drum making and Indian dances were just samples of the demonstrations held at the Indian powwow Saturday, March 27.

To conclude the 1982 Symposium of the American Indian, a powwow and craft show were held in the Memorial Union. Historically, these celebrations were religious and overseen by spiritual leaders, although today the powwow is more of a social and intertribal gathering.

Prior to the powwow a crafts fair, "Expressions of the Arts in Powwow," was held featuring the colorful bead work, quill work, breastplates, shawls and ribbon work of the American Indian, as well as drum making.

Ben Bear of the Mesquakie tribe was the master of ceremonies and introduced the Bear singers, Red Earth singers and students from the Red School House and Heart of Earth School.

Started as alternative schools for native Americans in the Minneapolis area, Red School and Heart of Earth School emphasize history and cultural traditions of the American Indian. In addition to regular academic studies the school also stresses the importance of the Indian heritage and Indian crafts such as costume making, drumming, dancing and singing songs in their native tongues.

The Symposium is sponsored by the American Indian Program Committee and the United Native American Student Association with funding from GSB and the Committee on Lectures.

Food for Thought

Tostadas, Baklava, Tabouli and Egg Foo Yung were just enticing samples of the vast array of food sold at the annual International Food Fair, April 18, 1982.

The Food Fair, sponsored by the Cosmopolitan Club which is celebrating its 75th anniversary, provided an excellent opportunity for armchair travelers to enjoy the sights, sounds and tastes of eighteen different countries — without the air fare.

ISU student groups representing their native lands in Asia, Africa, the Middle East, Europe and Central and South America, displayed the dishes, crafts and talents of their homelands, yet still taking advantage of the opportunity to interact within the different cultures. "Watching everyone work together was fantastic," said Becky Roach, adviser for the Cosmopolitan Club.

The sunroom in the Memorial Union was transformed into a rainbow of color as the students and children, dressed in the traditional costumes of their countries, twirled and whirled while performing their native dances and songs, as well as playing musical instruments.

"Spike Bunes" added American talent while performing on man's oldest instrument — bones. For the heavy metal enthusiasts Spike had a special treat — "boning" with wrenches.

Also featured was Irene Hsi from the Republic of China offering opera selections.

More than 1,000 people took part in the fair either by participating, performing or sampling the international cuisine.

All proceeds will benefit the Cosmopolitan Club's Chenru Scholarship Fund, which annually awards scholarships to undergraduates who have contributed to international understanding and communication.

The College of Education

finds a home

After fourteen years without one, the College of Education finally has a home. On May 1, 1982, the remodeled Quadrangle complex became the new residence for the College of Education, which originated in 1908.

The Quadrangle was first dedicated in 1912 and it housed the College of Veterinary Medicine. In 1976 Veterinary Medicine was transferred to the new south campus complex.

Three years later the Iowa Legislature granted ISU $4.5 million to remodel the Quadrangle complex for the College of Education and the department of psychology.

The unique architecture so characteristic of the Quadrangle was preserved, while two new auditoriums and ten additional classrooms were built. These improvements increased the structure's utility by 15 percent.

The remodeling of the Quadrangle makes it completely accessible to handicapped persons, whereas before the doorways were too narrow and there was no elevator to accommodate them.

Another feature of the remodeled structure is the computer-controlled heating and cooling system, designed to be more energy efficient. The courtyard of the Quadrangle was converted into a student center equipped with tables and chairs.

Besides making a home for the College of Education and the department of psychology, the Quadrangle welcomes Christian Petersen's sculpture "Praise Woman and Child," which is to be located in the student center.

The improved Quadrangle is now equipped to accommodate ISU students and faculty for years to come.

Ignoring nuclear war won't make it go away. This message was reiterated through the many activities at ISJ and in Ames during national Ground Zero Week, April 18-25, 1982.

"Fellow hostages, what are you going to do about your situation?" Jim Clinchfeiter, associate pastor at Collegiate Presbyterian Church in Ames, questioned a noon-time Maintenance Shop audience. "We are hostages of the Russian's arms and they are hostages of our arms," he continued. "We're playing a game with a planet and we don't have any other planet to discard if it doesn't work." Stressed Clinchfeiter, "This is for keeps."

Ground Zero is a national non-partisan educational effort to prevent nuclear war. Founded by Roger and Earl Molander, it is organized at the grass roots level to educate and get citizens involved in the nuclear arms issue by focussing on their community.

"Ground zero" is the technical term for the area directly below an exploding nuclear weapon.

Ground Zero Week began with a brief ceremony and the placing of a Ground Zero marker on Lincoln Way, illustrating the ground zero area if a one-megaton bomb hit the St. Cecilia's Convent and School area in Ames. A five-kilometer walk/ten-kilometer run for survival followed the ceremony.

Other activities during the week included a post-bomb tour of Ames, where county, city and ISJ officials toured the city and discussed possible damage to Ames in case of a nuclear attack. Films were shown nightly on campus. They dealt with different aspects of nuclear weapons including the economic impacts and medical consequences of the nuclear arms race.

A central campus rally, Thursday, climaxed the Ground Zero educational efforts. Organized by the Bi-Lateral Nuclear Freeze Campaign on campus, the rally began with Joe Taschetta, an Ames musician, performing songs with anti-nuclear themes. He was joined by the audience, estimated at 100 people, during the chorus of one song begging America to slow down in the arms race.

Next a group of approximately thirty volunteers from the crowd helped dramatize the effects of a one-megaton bomb dropped on the campanile. They stood in groups twenty feet apart; this distance represented a mile.

"You're the lucky ones," Jamie Barmettler, a rally organizer, told the group nearest the campanile, "you get vaporized instantly."

Marilyn Fenn, the 4th congressional district freeze coordinator, graphically described the effects to Ames and neighboring areas from the surprise nuclear attack. As she spoke, the participants fell to the ground "dead" while those farther away became "deformed" as they illustrated, in human terms, the deaths and mutations that would inevitably occur.

Robert Patterson, a Student Health Service physician, then detailed the health hazards of such an attack. "Death is inevitable, but often painfully delayed," he said. The surviving doctors would have to work twenty hours a day and would only be able to see the most severely injured for ten minutes every eight days, Patterson described. He continued, saying there would be no sanitary facilities, no transportation, no food, and eighty percent of the ozone layer would be destroyed. "Imagine the grief and shame of the people surviving," he said. "The living shall truly envy the dead."

Fenn concluded the rally by clearing up popular misconceptions concerning American and Soviet nuclear weapons.

A series of posters at the rally and public places during the week gave facts on the effects and dangers of nuclear war. Non-nuke paraphernalia was peddled, as well as petitions calling for a nuclear weapons freeze. Organizers of Ground Zero Week attempted to educate the public by bringing the issue of nuclear war, a subject easily put off as "not immediately threatening," to a personal level. After learning about the devastation of nuclear war, organizers hope citizens will involve themselves with the issue. "There is still time. Each of us is as powerful as anyone else. We need only to become informed and to act," Patterson emphasized.

"NO MORE NUKES."

"We all knew what we were against, but I also felt that there was a great sense in the crowd that people were there for things. They were for a better existence for all people, they were for a world without fear, they were for a lot of very constructive, fully human visions — things people think can happen, not just plans," reminisced Marilyn Fenn, an Ames peace worker, who attended one of the many rallies held throughout the United States on June 12, 1982, to mark the United Nations Second Special Session on Nuclear Disarmament. Fenn attended the New York City rally, where the "no-nuke" message was voiced the loudest by an estimated 800,000 to 1,000,000 people who overflowed Central Park's Great Lawn.

The gathering was a literal mosaic of humanity; people of virtually every description were there. Delegations arrived from 500 U.S. cities and several foreign countries, including Sweden, Canada, Norway, West Germany, Bangladesh and Zambia. Chartered buses allowed large groups to travel less expensively. Two thousand buses were chartered for the event.

The protestors included ministers, Union members, homemakers, musicians, lawyers, teachers, physicians and Iowans for Peace. Senior citizens and infants, Communists and Republicans, Japanese and American citizens, rich and poor, gathered at the largest political demonstration in U.S. history.

Groups began entering the city before dawn. By 9:30 a.m. streets were blockaded and various coalitions were forming at streets perpendicular to the parade route. The vast parade, complete with floats and 160,000 marchers, moved from the U.N. Building, picking up groups of marchers marchers voiced their one message in varying ways: "Arms Are For Embracing," "Build Houses Not Bomb Shelters," "Bread Not Bombs," "Freeze or Burn," and "Radioactive Fallout Fades Your Genes."

An estimated 150 Iowans, over thirty of them from Ames, journeyed to New York to participate in the rally. Fenn, Iowa's 4th Congressional District Freeze Coordinator, was seated with other "Iowa Peace Contingent" members approximately half way along the parade route. The group listened to rally speeches and songs projected through speakers suspended at street intersections, while they waited two hours for the march to reach them. "It was incredible!" Fenn enthused. "I've never seen so many human beings ... just eternities of people stretching in every direction."

ISU students Kim Niven, Tim Anderson and Tom Jackson did not participate in the parade. Instead, once in New York, they were recruited as rally "peacemakers." Acting as money collectors, they passed cans through the crowd to help eliminate the large rally deficit. After doing that on time, they helped handicapped and elderly persons into the area directly in front of the stage. "It was neat for us, too, because we were right in front. You couldn't see everyone behind you. You could look out but you couldn't see all the way back there!" Niven described.

The parade and rally were organized by a coalition of approximately 100 activist groups. The groups agreed on two things: worldwide military disarmament, including a freeze on the production and deployment of nuclear weapons, and an increase in monetary allocations for social need while decreasing military funds.

The rally speakers, like the audience, formed a conglomerate of divergent groups. Union, black, and Hispanic leaders decried the weapons, as did mothers, clergy and doctors. Musicians Jackson Browne, Bruce Springsteen, Joan Baez, Linda Ronstadt and James Taylor performed between the day's speeches.

The relationship between the 5,000 New York City police officers assigned to monitor the event and the crowd of protestors was amiable. No disturbances or incidences of violence occurred during the day.

Protesters gathered to express their anger toward the Regan administration's nuclear arms policy. Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger said that a large rally turnout was unlikely to have a direct impact on administration policy, in an interview conducted the day before the rally.

German chancellor Helmut Schmidt, however, regarded the size of the protest as a political shift in the opinion of Americans concerning nuclear weapons.

Several of the Ames rallygoers said they found the experience personally strengthening. Besides reading about the New York City rally in the newspapers or seeing it on the nightly news, citizens who didn't attend were reached in another way.

"Across the country there were people who knew people who went to New York, people who took the time and money to do something like that," Fenn explained. "Somehow the arms race seems like something we should all care about more when you know people who have gone," she said.

For the protesters, with the rally behind them, the battle against nuclear arms is constantly gaining strength. To change policy, however, Anderson projected, "It's going to take more rallies and a lot more outcry before it's dramatically changed."

Protesters Block U.N. Missions; 1600 Arrested

Two days after the largest political demonstration in U.S. history, where thousands gathered peacefully in New York City to protest nuclear weapons, police carted off 1,600 anti-nuclear arms protesters from the United Nations Missions; it was the nation's largest mass arrest at a demonstration.

It was June 14, 1982, a Monday morning. As Mission employees of the United States, the Soviet Union, France, China, Britain, and other countries possessing nuclear weapons, arrived for work they found rows of protesters trying to keep them out of Dag Hammarskold Plaza and several police officers and wooden barricades to help get them into the building.

Like the participants at the rally earlier, the protesters were not the stereotypical crazed radicals. "It's one thing to look at a group of people and be able to classify them as lunatics. It's another thing to have your son or somebody that you see in church or somebody that might be your kid's babysitter being arrested. You have to start dealing with the implications of why they feel that strongly about the arms race," said ISU student Tom Jackson of his civil disobedience.

Civil disobedience (CD) is not a haphazard, anything goes protest. Instead, most of the protesters were organized into trained affinity groups that had support people watching out for them on the "outside."

Seated outside the stairway leading to the entrance of the French Mission was "Corn and Roses," an affinity group consisting of approximately sixteen Iowans and New Yorkers.

The idea of the CD was to "stop business as usual" at the Missions. The demonstrators talked to the Mission workers as they tried to enter the building. "I would say, 'We came from Iowa to ask you not to go to work today. Work for peace today instead of for a wage. We're protesting the French Mission, which is in this building, and their participation in the escalation of the nuclear arms race,'" explained Ames peace worker Marilyn Fenn. The reaction from workers ranged from some who agreed not to go in to work, to those annoyed at the inconvenience the CD caused.

Jim Dubert, an ISU graduate student, had been involved with other CD activities and stressed the importance of assertive action. "In this case the action was to non-violently, in a symbolic way, block the Mission. If you just sit there and don't move when a new hole opens up, you're not really symbolically, or even non-violently, blocking. You're just sitting there on the sidewalk," he said.

Approximately twenty minutes after the CD began, more affinity groups arrived and the protesters were successfully barring the workers. That's when the arrests began. Those that wouldn't walk were carried on stretchers to large public buses. Before boarding, Polaroids were snapped, and many of the protesters gave their names and showed identification.

Fenn and ISU student Kim Niven were together on a bus. Both women refused to give their names because they could not afford to return to New York for court proceedings. On their way to a Manhattan jail and courthouse, their arresting officers tried to persuade them to give their names. "You're just a nice girl from Iowa, you don't want to go to a New York City jail," Fenn was told. "You're not going to like jail. You got cigarettes? You'd better try to get another pack, they make friends in jail," Niven's arresting officer advised.

They were taken before a judge and told they were the first from the CD to go through. A lawyer told them they could refuse to give their names and go to jail, or give their names, and all charges would be dropped if they were not arrested in New York for six months. They gave their names and left.

On another bus Jackson and Tim Anderson, also an ISU student, refused to give their names. "A lot of what the police and the city government were involved in was making the whole action as politically bland as they could. So non-cooperating to the extent of not giving your name was just a way of slowing them down some, not letting them gloss it off too quickly," Jackson said.

When they refused to give a name, they were told they would be sent to Riker's Island jail. An impatient police officer yelled, swore, and told them Riker's horror stories. "He didn't scare me because that type of behavior I don't buy. He was just trying to threaten me. He didn't seem sincere, whereas my arresting officer sat down with me and said, 'Just between me and you on a personal basis, someone with your looks and the way you're built is not going to have it very easy in there and I'm worried about your health,'" Anderson said, and continued, "So he was almost like my dad telling me I'm really worried about your personal safety. I don't understand why you don't want to cooperate with me." He scared me," Anderson admitted.

Anderson finally gave a name, was given a summons and released.

Jackson, still refusing to give a name, was held in a cell with other protesters while his fingerprints were processed. Eight hours later, when his fingerprints returned with no record or name, Jackson appeared before a judge. The judge declared nuclear weapons illegal in the name of justice and dropped all charges against them.

"The rally showed the country and the world what we were trying to say. The civil disobedience made me get stronger in my own feelings about what I was trying to do and how far I was willing to go with it," Niven summarized.

FEARS DISCUSSED

Rain and cloudy days had become common place for Ames residents, but Saturday, June 12, 1982, the Ames sky was a brilliant blue, obstructed only by a few wispy shreds of clouds. That evening, Bondshell Park with its thick grass and sturdy trees provided a gathering place for many people — ISU students, senior citizens, Ames and neighboring town residents, and children — who met to express their views on the subject of nuclear disarmament.

The town meeting, sponsored by Ames churches and four peace groups, drew an estimated 145 people. The event, along with other town meetings and rallies across the country, coincided with the United Nations Second Special Session on Disarmament.

A microphone was positioned at the front of the crowd and Rod Fisher, a Ground Zero organizer, invited anyone to express his or her opinion within a two-minute time limit.

Audience members did express their opinions — in a variety of ways. Ames musician Joe Taschetta started off the meeting. The audience joined him in "This Land is Your Land" and a song written by Taschetta about the 200 billion dollars that go to U.S. weapons every year. "That's a lot of zeros!" he remarked. "It becomes just a number to us," he said. Later in the evening a woman sang a Bob Dylan song and another sang a hymn. Another person read a poem, and two 12-year-old boys told a Reagan joke. Most of the participants simply talked, expressing their fears over nuclear weapons, and the prospect of nuclear war.

Corrinne Parker, of Nevada, stated, "It is imperative that we eliminate the fear of annihilation now." A member of the Iranian Student Organization at ISU said that although the Soviet Union and the United States believe in different ideas, it is important that they listen to each other. "If a nuclear war happens neither side will be existing he reasoned. Marvin Skadberg, a professor of economics, expressed one of the reasons that the nuclear arms-control movement is an all-encompassing one. "In the past, anti-war movements have had to depend on young people. Now, for the first time, all U.S. adults know what it's like to have their lives on the line," he said.

Many of the speakers called for a freeze in arms production and deployment of nuclear arms as a beginning solution to the prevention of nuclear war.

Other citizens spoke against nerve gas, conflicts in El Salvador and war in general. "There's got to be a better way of living," remarked ISU student Dave Duetmeyer. "People can talk instead of grabbing a weapon," he suggested.

Toward the end of the evening, Loise Henderson stood before the group and repeated a fear her seven-year old daughter had voiced. "Mommy, sometimes when I go out to play I'm afraid a big bomb is going to come out of the sky and I'll never find you again," the girl had said to her mother.

A growing number of citizens throughout America are making an effort to eliminate this fear by joining the movement to eliminate nuclear war.

"... representative government doesn't work for women..."

Wednesday followed Tuesday, and June 30, 1982, came like any other day. Unlike any ordinary day, however, that Wednesday marked the end of a ten-year struggle to guarantee equality — despite gender — under the law. Following a torrent of desperate last-minute lobbying, debate and vandalism, the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution died that Wednesday. Thirty-five states ratified the amendment; thirty-eight were needed for the ERA to become law. The proposed 27th Amendment, approved by Congress in 1972, read: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex."

Since its introduction in 1923, the ERA has been controversial. ERA objectors warned Americans that women would be forced to enter the labor market, that prostitution would be legalized, that women would be drafted into the military and that unisex public restrooms would become the norm if the twenty-four word amendment passed. Kathy Hickock, an ISU professor of English and the Iowa vice-president of NOW (National Organization for Women) claimed that these statements were simply lies, used as scare tactics by powerful ERA opponents.

The ratification process also created controversy when a thirty-nine month extension was granted in 1978 and when five state legislatures voted to withdraw their support to the amendment. Despite the ruling of a federal district court judge in Idaho, the rescissions were not considered legal.

The Ames NOW chapter, whose membership is composed of approximately half ISU students, concentrated a lot of time and money on the Illinois legislature, where a 3/5 vote was required in each legislative branch in order for the ERA to be ratified by that state. The ERA is the only bill that Illinois has applied the 3/5 rule to, and Illinois is the only state that required the rule.

During spring break the Ames NOW chapter sent representatives to Illinois to campaign for Susan Catania, who ran for Lt. Governor against House Speaker George Ryan, a chief ERA opponent. Ames representatives returned to Springfield to lobby against the 3/5 rule and again to participate in a June 6 rally.

Some people felt that women were treated equally and that the amendment was not needed, but Hickock said that many non-sexist programs are permanent, unenforceable and "don't go far enough."

As the deadline neared, pro-ERA forces lobbied vigorously in key states, and some resorted to vandalism to push for the amendment's passage.

ERA proponents exerted a final effort in Illinois during the pre-deadline days. Sonia Johnson, excommunicated from the Mormon Church because of her support for the ERA, led a group of seven women in a thirty-seven day fast in Springfield to protest the 3/5 rule and to pray for the passage of the ERA there. When, for the first time since 1975, the ERA came up for a vote in the Illinois Senate, the amendment missed ratification by five votes. Following the vote, nine women left the gallery and wrote senators' names with animal blood on the capitol floor. Other protesters used a chemical substance to burn "ERA" in forty-foot long, eighteen-inch wide letters on the Illinois capitol lawn.

Statistics showed that the majority of citizens — even those in unratified states — favored the passage of the ERA. "What people don't understand is that the ERA didn't pass because of about six powerful men in three states," Hickock said. "They are part of the people in this country who have the power and they don't want to share it."

June 30 was a day of celebration for some; other people mourned the defeat. A day after the deadline, various groups demonstrated their anger in differing ways. One group of women in Washington, D.C., drew blood from each other with hypodermic needles and spilled it on a copy of the Constitution. Others sprayed red paint on five marble columns at the National Archives, where the original Constitution is preserved.

In July some members of Congress reintroduced the amendment, trying to start the ratification process again, despite the feeling that a largely conservative Congress would not approve it.

With women comprising fifty-one percent of the population of the United States, Hickock felt that the failure of the ERA "proves to me that representative government doesn't work for women in this country."

Veronica Johnson, JIMC 4: "Two or three years ago I was of the opinion that ERA was going to destroy the family and home, and as a mother and wife that concerned me. I have since learned that ERA basically was giving women the constitutional rights they don't have."

SPRING INTRAMURALS

Whether it is relaxation, entertainment, keeping in shape, or just winning a T-shirt, the University Recreation Services (IRS) can provide it. They offer over sixty different intramural activities in men's, women's, and co-rec divisions for four different skill levels.

The University Recreation Services Association is composed of chairpersons from campus organizations. They help to coordinate the recreation program for ISU students and faculty. This includes appropriate time scheduling, adequate equipment and facilities, and officials.

The variety of activities is almost unlimited. There is everything from football to innertube water polo. The most interest and competition is centered around four major sports: football, volleyball, basketball and softball. Dormitory houses, sororities, fraternities, independents and graduate students are all encouraged to take part in the activities. Each team may choose its own name. Among the most original are "I Felta Thi" and Walloping Wompl. Of course the winner of each division receives one of the famous Iowa State University Intramural Champ T-Shirts, in just about any color.

Ann Kline

Equipment for these activities can be checked out free of charge almost anytime. Other equipment that can be rented out includes five different kinds of tents, two different types of ice skates (figure and hockey), boats, canoes and trailers, cross country skis, mess kits, stoves and lanterns. The list of equipment is nearly inexhaustible.

Beside providing organized time schedules, T-shirts, and equipment, they will also help organize off-campus trips and special events. All of these services are partially supported through students' tuition. So enjoy these benefits and join the majority of ISU students and faculty who make the IRS's functions more worthwhile.

Grapplers take 2nd in NCAA Championship

The NCAA wrestling championship was the talk of the town long before it happened. All the hotels in and surrounding Ames were booked full months in advance. The tickets for the final meet went like hotcakes and the scalpers had a heyday in the midst of it all. This was the fifth time ISU hosted this national event.

For the Cyclones to compete in the championship, they had to qualify by placing among the top three finishers at each weight in the Big Eight meet held at Lincoln, Nebraska. The grapplers qualified in all but one weight class, but they also received one wild card entry to fill the other weight class. Iowa was the other team to qualify a full ten member squad. The University of Iowa captured the 52nd NCAA title for the fifth consecutive time. ISU came in second with Oklahoma bringing up a close third place.

Overall for the Cyclones, Nate Carr took the 150 pound weight class for the second year in a row. Perry Hummel, Joe Gibbons, Mike Mann, and Kevin Darkus will all be back next year with experience in the NCAA finals. Coach Nichols did lose a valuable senior this year, Ames native Jim Gibbons. With almost all varsity lettermen returning, the outlook for next year proves promising.

She has had much experience and has received many honors in college for her athletic abilities.

An important fielding change by women's head softball coach Kelly Phipps turned out to be instrumental in guiding the Cyclone women to a winning 1982 campaign. Phipps moved her star outfielder Peg Geary to the pitching mound. There she compiled a 14-5 record and an unbelievable 0.46 earned run average.

Geary and pitching partner Sue Wedemeier, an All-Big Eight selection, were not receiving much help at the plate early in the season. As the weather warmed up so did the Cyclone bats as they won thirteen out of fifteen games during one stretch of the season.

In the Big Eight Championships the Cyclones received a fifth place finish, but not before beating second seeded Kansas in the opening round of play. The women battled Kansas behind Wedemeier's brilliant pitching performance enroute to a 1-0 victory.

In the last tournament of the season, the AIAW Region 6 Championships, the Cyclones lost a heartbreaking three-winning marathon to Southwest Missouri. ISU outfielder Patti McDonald was named to the All-AIAW Region 6 team.

Nebraska turned out to be the Big Eight champion, while Missouri, Oklahoma and Kansas State finished out the top half. ISU placed fifth and was followed by Oklahoma State and Kansas in a tie for sixth, while Colorado rounded out the bottom half.

Young Team With High Hopes

After losing nine seniors, coaches Larry Corrigan and Bob Randall did a superb job with the ISU baseball team of seven returning lettermen and twenty-two newcomers. The team pulled out a good season ending up 30-26 overall. Second year head coach, Larry Corrigan, lost lettermen from off the mound, behind the plate, and in the outfield. But he filled these spots with a team composed of mostly freshmen and juniors, which leaves an outlook for next year with plenty of leadership and experience.

One of the team standouts would have to be junior third baseman, Mike Hocutt. As a sophomore he was elected MVP at the Sanford Tournament in Florida with a .500 batting average. But as a junior in the tournament, the left-handed hitter batted .594 and had seventeen RBI's to help the team win eight out of ten games. Mike didn't stop there, but continued to excel in every offensive department the rest of the season setting new records in almost every one.

Sophomore Jim Walewander also set a new Big Eight record with forty-six base-on-balls. Freshman Todd Raabe and junior Bob Mancuso helped in the offensive rally to win sixty-four games in the past two seasons.

Injuries Slow Men's Track Season

Injuries to key people turned out to be the eventual downfall in the 1982 men's outdoor track campaign. The Cyclones went from a first place Big Eight finish in 1981 to a sixth place finish in 1982.

Injured were 1981 National Collegiate Athletic Association discus champion Scott Crowell, and Yobes Ondieki, who placed second in the 1982 NCAA Indoor meet in the 3000 meter run. Both Crowell and Ondieki were redshirted. These and other injuries helped pull the Cyclones out of first place.

Despite the sixth place finish in the Big Eight outdoor meet, there were some high points to the season. The Cyclones proved their track dominance in the state by literally running away with the Iowa Big Four Meet. ISU had 84 total points while Northern Iowa and Iowa tied with 44. Drake pulled with the rear with 24 total points. The outdoor team also had six first places in both the Iowa State Open and the Minnesota Invitational.

The men's indoor track team was second only to Kansas in the Big Eight meet. The Cyclones also won the indoor Iowa Big Four meet by a large margin.

Head track coach Bill Bergan said, "Overall, I was pleased with the season. We were pleased in being the Big Eight cross country champs and second in the Big Eight indoor season. We had the talent for the outdoor, but staying healthy turned out to be the problem."

Tracksters Finish Seventh in AIAW

Snow and cold weather slows down some track teams, however, the ISU outdoor women's track team burned up a lot of track during their two and a half months of spring season.

The team opened the season March 26 at the Arkansas Relays. There, they qualified four individuals and a relay team for the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women Nationals Competition. The qualifying sprint medley relay team of Colleen Hanna, Nancy Roeller, Kelley Mathews and Sumetia Wells clocked a finishing time of 1:44.75, breaking an Arkansas Relay record.

The Cyclones finished third in the Kansas Relays and qualified three additional individuals for Nationals Competition.

Six runners placed in the top ten at the Drake Relays. In addition, two relay teams and Wells, a senior, added their names to the list of AIAW qualifiers.

Following the Drake Relays, the Cyclone tracksters returned to Cyclone Country to host the Big Four Track Meet May 2. The Cyclones won eleven out of the sixteen scheduled events. Three records were broken by Cyclone runners.

April 15-16 the Cyclones competed in the Big Eight Championship in Norman, Oklahoma.

Fighting to regain the title that was held by the Cyclones for six consecutive years beginning in 1974, the 1982 team finished third behind Nebraska and Oklahoma.

Wren Schaffer contributed a first place finish in the 1500-meter run with a time of 4:24.16. Kelley Mathews was the only other Cyclone champion, winning the 400-meter hurdles with a respectable time of :59.84. Twenty-one additional runners placed in the top ten.

The ISU women's track team capped off their season with a seventh place finish in the AIAW National Championship in College Station, Texas May 27. ISU had twenty three entries.

Colleen Hanna added her name to the small group of ISU championship winners by capturing the 100-meter dash title with a time of :11.73. The sophomore from Nassau also broke the 100 meter school record in semi-finals competition. She also set a school mark in the 200-meter dash with a 23.95 clocking.

ISU had six other placers in the meet: Wells, fourth in the 400 at :53.73, Hanna, fifth in the 200; Denise Bullocks, fifth in the 400; Melanie Heitman, sixth in the javelin throw; Wren Schaffer, sixth in the 1,500 and the 4 x 400 relay (Bullocks, Lois Groen, Nancy Roeller and Wells); third.

Because of their performances in the AIAW, six of ISU's track women were awarded All-American honors. They were: Hanna, Melanie Heitman, Schaffer, Wells, Bullocks, Groen and Roeller.

Tennis Team Nets 15-12 Season

The ISU men's tennis team played a full spring schedule including 27 dual meets and the Big Eight Tournament.

The Cyclone netters finished the season with a winning 15-12 record. Despite a winning record overall, the Cyclones finished 2-5 in tough Big Eight competition.

Spring season began in Ames February 14 with four victorious home meets.

After the home meets, the netters played nineteen straight games on the road winning ten, including a 9-0 win over Drake University in Des Moines.

Four home meets completed the season for the Cyclones. Despite the fact that the tennis team was home, they lost the last four meets of the season.

Five days after regular season ended, the Cyclones traveled to Kansas City, Missouri to compete in the Big Eight Championship.

Iowa Stater Doug Wenzel, a sophomore from Cedar Rapids, led the Cyclones to a sixth place finish in the Championship.

Wenzel was the highest finisher for the Cyclones, beating Doug Elsass of Nebraska in his final match 6-1, 3-6, 6-0.

Junior Mike Kopp, ISU's number one singles player finished eighth when he lost to Ed Bolen of Kansas.

In doubles play, the number one team of Kopp and Brian Martin finished sixth.

Of the meet, head coach Bernie Weiss said, "We performed about as well as we did in our Big Eight duals. I was hoping for a little better, but it was true to form."

In individual statistics, Kopp finished with a 7-7 record. Brian Pung finished 11-8. Dave Eberhart ended 10-5 and Wenzel wrapped up a 11-5 season.

The doubles team of Martin and Kopp won eight of five doubles matches. Len Ambrosini and Pung finished 7-7.

It was a long year for the Cyclone netters. Some of it was successful and some was disappointing, but it was a winning season to be sure.

Battling injuries and playing out of position, the ISU women's tennis team finished the spring season with a disappointing 5-7 dual meet record and a seventh place finish in the Big Eight Tournament.

Cyclone tennis coach Christa Townsend commented, "I hate to say injuries were an excuse, but in an individual sport, if you lose one player, you're hurting."

The Cyclone netters lost four players to injuries during the season, forcing many of the girls to play out of position.

In dual meet action, the Cyclones downed Emporia State in Tulsa, 6-3. The netters trounced Tulsa 8-1 and beat Cameron 7-2 in Seminole, Oklahoma. The Cyclones' two other wins came April 10 and 11 when they beat both William Jewell College and Northern Iowa 9-0 and 7-5 respectively.

The Cyclones finished sixth of eight teams in the Kansas State Invitational. ISU brought home two second place finishes in the tourney. Patti Poone finished second in number one singles and Karin Zalesky was second in number two singles.

Final individual records were: Poone at 12-6, Zalesky at 10-7, Kelly Meierhenry at 8-10 and Laura Hall at 8-7.

In doubles, Poone and Zalesky finished 8-10 followed by Hall and Paulson with a dual meet final of 6-10.

It was a hard season for the women's tennis team.

Townsend said, "Generally, even though it was a tough year and people had to play out of positions, everyone improved."

Not Even Cold Weather Could Stop Them

Snow, frost and extremely low windchill factors hampered the practice time of the ISU men's golf team. And if that wasn't enough to stop them, the reconstruction of the Veenker Memorial Golf Course limited practice and playing time most of the spring.

Dale Anderson, going into his sixteenth year as head coach, felt the effects of the severe lowa weather at the Wheatshocker Classic in Wichita, Kansas. "We couldn't get the work we needed because of the snow on the course, and when it melted, the course was too wet to play," explained Anderson. Although the linksters ended up fourteenth out of twenty teams, their rounds improved as time went on.

The next big tournament proved to be a change of pace for the ISU Linksters. At the Drake Relays Festival Tournament ISU placed sixth out of twenty-seven teams. Junior Chris Cochran had the leading score for the Cyclones with a 77-78-75.

At the Northern Intercollegiate at Iowa City, ISU finished ahead of five Big 10 teams. This included the defeat of our rivals for three consecutive days on the Hawkeyes' home course. Chris Donielson posted rounds of 74-77-71 to help the linksters finish sixth out of fifteen teams.

ISU held its place in the top six teams in the majority of the tournaments played this spring. Team members Cary Kyhl and Joe Ward (cocaptains) along with Ned Zachar, Cochran and Donielson were a major part of this spring's turnout. But Coach Anderson sums it up the best: "This group is very competitive. In fact there is little difference between our top man and our fifth man."

Golfers Go To AIAW Nationals

ISU's women's golf team played a five meet spring schedule and was the first team since 1975 to travel to the AIAW national golf tournament at Ohio State University, June 16-19.

The beginning of the season started slow for the Cyclones. At the Tiger Tangle in Texas, the women golfers finished fifth out of six teams.

The Sooner Invitational in Oklahoma found the Cyclones sixth in a field of eight. April 22, the golfers traveled to Iowa City to participate in the Iowa Invitational. The Cyclones finished an impressive fifth place in a field of ten teams with 964. Mary Jo Cunningham shot a 234, followed by teammate Connie Carlson with 240.

The Cyclones then returned home to host the Big Eight Championship at the George Veenker Memorial Golf Course, April 26-28.

After first round competition, the Cyclone women were in sixth place with a team total of 344.

In second round, the Cyclones advanced to fifth place with a 569. Dawn Kain shot an 80. Mary Jo Cunningham finished the day with 78 strokes.

In the final round, Kain shot a 78 and Connie Carlson finished with an 82. The Cyclones ended the tournament in fifth place with 1002. Oklahoma State won the tourney with 917 strokes.

Following the Big Eight Tournament, ISU had an impressive finish in the Stephens Invitational in Columbia, Missouri. The Cyclones finished second with 904. Kain shot 225 to lead the Cyclone women.

The highlight of the season came when the women golfers won a trip to the AIAW national tournament. It had been eight years since the Cyclones had won a bid to play in nationals.

"It was a real compliment to the team," said coach Joan Gearhart. "It took a real team effort. We were only one of three northern schools in the tourney. We started off slow in the spring, but finished strong. The final scores really helped us."

Dawn Kain, Mary Jo Cunningham, Connie Carlson, Julie Sprau and Pat Cone competed in the tournament.

Pre season training makes the difference

"Preseason training gives you a better attitude and a better team concept," says Ron Harris, junior guard for the Cyclone basketball team. Many people have the wrong belief that pre season training is all physical. True, it is physical, but it also has to deal with the mental aspects of the game as well.

All athletes have different methods of training which suits their sport the best. Basketball players deal with running, weight lifting and their overall game.

For the first two weeks, the basketball players played basketball at Beyer Hall for about two hours a day. Assistant Coach Rick Wesley says "These first two weeks are mainly for the veterans. The freshmen, no matter how good they are, are pretty lost out on the court."

After the two week training session is up, the players combine their basketball playing with weight training. Tony Cole, strength coach, is in charge of this part of the workout, which takes place at the Olsen Building. Barry Stevens, a sophomore says "Lifting makes you a stronger ballplayer and the stronger you are, the better defence you play."

This is primarily the attitude of most of the players on the team. Coach Wesley says "If you're a hard worker, you can go in and get your lifting done in an hour, but if you screw around, it can take all day."

During the preseason training, the players eat their evening meals at the training table. The training table is where some of the athletes eat because it has bigger portions of food. This is set up because the players have all the burdens of a regular student, plus a couple of hours of practice a night. They need all the extra calories they can get. Funding for the training table comes from the Athletic Department.

With the beginning of training, the basketball players start their running. The players run up the hills by the football field and then turn their attention to running sprints. The running continues into their regular season practice which starts on October 15.

"Our attitude is really good right now. We have confidence and that's half the battle," says Ron Harris. A good mental attitude going into a practice or training session gives the athlete twice the inspiration that a poor attitude would. A poor frame of mind usually puts the athlete or team on the losing side of the ledger.

"When you have the team working hard and playing hard all the time, it just gets you that much more up for the season," said Harris. This attitude helped the Cyclones at the end of last year when they played their best basketball of the season.

Coach Wesley shares these same feelings: "You get the best results when you play together both mentally and physically. Since we have a good attitude already, it will make the ride that much smoother."

From swimming to basketball, pre season training is an important dimension of the athlete's life. Each individual sport is handled a little differently, but all athletes realize the importance of it.

On Both Sides of the Fence

Teaching a student in one class and then relating to him or her on a social level in another class is something most students will never deal with. However, graduate students who help professors instruct classes do it every day.

"It's hard because the age difference is so close, but on the other hand, that can make it easier to sympathize with students," said Garmen Herigstad, who taught a Graphic Communications class in the Industrial Education Department.

Statistics instructor Carolyn Conner also said how hard it is to relate to the same people, yet wear a different hat each time. "One problem I have is coming in contact with people in different areas. I have to be the instructor and then be their friend the next time I see them," she said.

It was really hard when she taught as an undergraduate last year. She wondered whether students would take her seriously, since she was the same age as they were. "It's hard to be myself sometimes, because I feel like I have to be the teacher," she said.

It's hard enough that teaching assistants have to relate to students in different ways, but teaching involves a lot of extra work besides.

Teaching assistants end up going to bed late and getting up early in order to prepare for both the classes they teach and the ones they take. Being prepared to lecture for three hours is the most difficult part of teaching, Herigstad said. Conner said her problem is that sometimes she gives her teaching classes priority over her studies and lets studying slide. Also, she said, keeping the required office hours and reading the class texts takes up a lot of free time.

Ann Knox

Above: The Industrial Education graphics class taught by Garmen Herigstad, enables students to learn how to operate offset presses, process cameras and typesetting equipment. Senior Triah Garcia receives instructions on how to operate the offset press from Herigstad.

Ann Kiser

Herigstad said since he's been teaching he finds it much easier to interpret class material from a teacher's point of view. This has made it easier to determine what expectations his instructors have of him. Teaching has been a benefit in that respect, he said.

Herigstad said the worst part of being a teacher is expecting the student and teacher, to produce a certain quality of work. If either one fails his expectations, it's a disappointment.

To Conner, the worst part of teaching is being a "softie," as she calls herself, which makes it difficult sometimes when dealing with peers. She said some students try to take advantage of teaching assistants, but she tries to put her foot down when this happens.

"Seeing a student produce something of quality is the best part of teaching."

Herigstad said, "Since I'm interested in what I'm teaching, it makes teaching more fun," he said.

He said he feels that being the source of what a student learns has helped him learn responsibility. "It involves much more pressure than just sitting in class taking notes," he said.

Conner said, "Teaching has helped me understand the other side and respect how difficult teaching can be." Another benefit is that it has helped her to understand her major even better than before. She said sometimes she gets nervous and tongue-tied, but all in all, she's really enjoyed the experience. In fact, she may even consider teaching as a career, something she had never thought about before, she said.

A Ghost on Campus Has Plastic Surgery

Printing T-shirts, stationery, photographs and Christmas cards are only a few of the projects that Industrial Education students have done. That alone is exciting, but the remodeling of the I Ed building was one of the biggest thrills for the students this year.

At the end of the 1981-82 school year, all the Graphic Communications equipment that was housed in Building O was transferred to a remodeled area of the I Ed II Building. Building O has now been removed from the ISU campus.

The difference in working facilities is great, said Assistant Professor Larry Bradshaw. The darkroom has "vastly improved," he said. Two darkrooms are now available for the students' use, where there was only one previously. One room houses a vertical process camera which couldn't be used before due to lack of space, Bradshaw said.

Three new enlargers have been installed also. A new air conditioner keeps the darkroom well ventilated.

A Photomechanical Transfer processor (PMT) is one new machine that Bradshaw said he is excited about. It will enable students to enlarge or reduce artwork and copy immediately, saving time, negatives and film.

The laboratory classroom itself is much roomier than the old building was. Separate areas of the room hold printing presses, silkscreen tables, a typesetter and drawing tables. The machines are also located more conveniently in relation to each other than they were in Building O, Bradshaw said.

Having new facilities may increase the number of students who take graphics courses. Many non-majors have been taking graphics classes to supplement their studies.

Quite a few art students have shown up in the I Ed classes to learn how a printer might set their material in the real world. "Some of the Art Department students have done great work," Bradshaw said. "Somehow they are finding out about the graphics classes. It appears to be a grapevine from student to student, although advisors are suggesting students take I Ed classes," he said.

The I Ed club is planning to use the new lab room for some activities. Some of the students that have already fulfilled their requirements for graphics classes will be able to try out some of the new equipment this way, Bradshaw said.

Bradshaw said that students who graduate in Industrial Education will have the background for some interesting jobs. "If they go into industry, I hope our people won't be printers," he said. "ISU graduates should be qualified for better jobs than that. They will have a good background for plant layout and design, purchasing work or even management positions," he said.

Bradshaw said he is curious to see whether the lab increases interest in the department. "I think we have a new facility we can be proud of and will attract new people," he said.

Things Are Looking Up

Observing the planets lining up, catching a glimpse of the rings around Saturn for the first time and watching meteor showers were only a few of the astronomical events of 1982.

Astronomers weren't the only ones in Ames who got to check out the sky, however. Dr. Lee Anne Willson of the Physics Department had her students in Astronomy 120 observe many different times during the year to observe the extra terrestrial happenings. This was a particularly good year to observe the motions of the heavenly bodies, she said.

Many students don't even realize ISU offers Astronomy courses, but enrollment is growing and Astronomy is starting to become a visible part of the Physics Department, Willson said.

"One thing Astro has going for it is that people are generally curious about it," Willson said. She likes to pick topics to cover in class that people want to know about and are interested in.

Students can't get a Bachelor of Arts degree in Astronomy at ISU. Instead, they major in Physics and take a few undergraduate Astronomy classes. A degree is available at the graduate level, ISU's first PhD in Astronomy graduated less than ten years ago, Willson said.

Willson went on to say she is excited with how much the area of Astronomy has grown at ISU in the last few years. The planetarium was built in 1976, the courses are now called Astronomy instead of Physics and three new astronomy professors have been hired this year, she said.

Willson said she hopes a lab course for the students in the elementary classes can eventually be added to give the undergraduate students more on-hand experience.

Shaking Hands With ISU

Remember those people called Cyclone Aides and Cyclone Guides who made you feel welcome when you were a prospective freshman? Well, some of us may have forgotten them, but the two programs are still going strong.

Sophomores, juniors and seniors can become Cyclone Aides if they make it through the selection process. Out of 110 people who applied this year, twenty-three were chosen. They were evaluated on their awareness, ability to communicate, desire and enthusiasm.

Once they were selected, the Aides went to training sessions all spring, which totaled 120 hours. During these training sessions, they learned about ISU history, financial aid, religious organizations, football tickets, Ames traffic regulations and everything else a student or parent could ask about ISU. The hours spent together also help bring the Aides closer to each other.

By June 1, the Cyclone Aides were moved into Linden Hall and ready to go. They worked until July 2 and received $600 plus room and board. A Cyclone Aide's duties vary each day from leading campus tours, to holding informal question and answer sessions with parents, to taking the freshmen out for ice cream in the evening. This keeps them too busy to take any summer school classes.

Margaret Healy, the orientation coordinator, is in charge of the Cyclone Aides. This year Tom Titus and Carma Jerning were assisting her. Ms. Healy feels that there are two important aspects of the Cyclone Aide program. One is the responsibility of making parents and students feel welcome and feel like someone cares about them at ISU. The other aspect of being an Aide is that, "It's an incredible opportunity for personal growth," she said. Being a Cyclone Aide helps a person to become familiar with all the things that ISU offers, and to become a resource person for one's friends.

Brenda Cook, one of last year's Cyclone Aides, agreed that she wanted to learn more about ISU and to pass the information on to others. She said that she learned a lot from working with the program. She thinks that an outstanding feature of ISU's orientation is that both students and their parents attend.

Members of this year's group said that they wanted to help people. They thought it was a valuable program, and that it would be fun. For Mark Ballard it coincides with his career direction, which is to be a college admissions counselor. Lindsey Nixt said she thought it was important to tell incoming freshman, "We made it; you can make it, too."

A Cyclone Guide is likely to be the first person a visitor to the ISU campus will have contact with. The Cyclone Guides are a part of the Student Alumni Association and are a totally separate group from the Cyclone Aides. Kathi Formanek, the student in charge of the program, says that their main function is to give tours of campus to high school seniors, clubs and other visiting groups.

The Guides also sponsor a "Cyclone Day" five times a year, when seniors who scored well on their ACTs come to learn more about ISU.

The twenty-five students involved are selected in the spring for their friendliness, responsibility, and neat appearance. Joyce Schultz is the group's advisor. Kathi summed up the Guides by saying, "We're basically public relations people for the university."

If You Have A Problem . . .

Call 4-HELP

How can you find out someone's phone number, how to get to a place of business in Ames or how to get financial aid? Although these three things may seem unrelated, each can be answered by a member of the Campus Information staff.

Campus Information moved from its old location in the Memorial Union, down the hall at the end of last year. The move was less than fifty feet, but the new office is more visible to the flow of people that pass by the hotel registration desk. Since the move increased Campus Information's visibility, the business has increased, also.

The number of people who walk up and request information has increased greatly, said last year's coordinator, Sherri Sherb.

This year, the information office has been headed under the Office of Student Life and the name has been changed from 4-Help to Campus Information. Coordinator of the program, Jan Huss, said the name was changed because people felt Campus Information was a better description of the services provided by the organization. Huss said that previously people had a tendency to confuse 4-Help as a telephone counseling service, which it isn't.

The service originally began in 1978, when it only provided taped programs about various questions students had, ranging from what's happening on campus to how to use the library. Now the service provides students with answers to almost any question a person may have concerning ISU or Ames in general. Huss said.

Most of the students employed at the Campus Information Center are college students enrolled in the college work-study program. They are interviewed, and if hired, they go through a short training period. The qualifications that are sought in the applicants are a good knowledge of the campus area and the ability to relate one-on-one with people. Generally upperclassmen are selected for the positions, although no particular major area of study is required.

The service is open from 8 a.m. to 12 a.m. seven days a week. Huss said Campus Information services approximately forty calls per hour and about thirty-fifty walk-in people per hour. She said the busiest hours are usually between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. and from 4 p.m. until closing at midnight.

Hub Has An Exciting Past And Future

Patty Weiss

Patty Weiss

One of ISU students' favorite spots on campus to eat lunch will undergo a complete renovation. The Hub will be renovated with funds given by the class of 1982. A total of $143,000 was pledged by members of the class of 1982 to remodel the Hub.

An outdoor eating area will be the highlight of the Hub's renovation, since it only has a small amount of space for eating indoors now. The grounds around the Hub will also be improved. Improvements on the interior of the building will include corrections for fire safety and a refurbishing of the food and vending areas.

The Hub was originally built in 1892 as a steam train depot for the Ames and College Railway. When the railway's services were discontinued in 1908, the building was moved to its present location, immediately West of Morrill Hall.

Before it was converted to an eating and vending area in 1958, it served as the campus bookstore and post office (a small cry from the Memorial Union). When it was changed to an eating facility it was given its name, the Hub, which has stuck ever since. Besides vending food, the Hub houses a copy center and a ticket window where tickets to ISU events are sold.

Two Hot Spots For A

Two places on ISU's campus provide students with a great opportunity to people-watch. The Hub and the Union are particularly good spots to look for the guy in your psychology class or the girl in your physics lab that you've just been dying to talk to.

Lunch time is the best time to catch the majority of the Iowa Staters, when both places are jam-packed with people banging on vending machines and trying to find a place to sit and munch.

Many times at noon, students end up standing. They don't know the luxury of having a place to park their brown bag and relax.

Seeing classmates that you haven't seen in awhile (maybe even since last semester) is the most exciting part of dining on campus. You never know who might come around the corner and ask you to share your table with him or her. It's a great way to climb up the social ladder and pretend you're really enjoying that gourmet chicken salad sandwich and the bag of carrot and celery sticks. Little does anyone know, the flavor of the food tastes a lot better when you're concentrating on something else.

A Place For Everything;

Whether you're in search of help or a hot dog, chances are you'll find it at the Memorial Union.

Most Iowa Staters visit the Union frequently, but few realize everything it has to offer.

Entertainment makes the Union a popular place.

A large game room in the basement is complete with electronic games, pool tables, and change machines. Next door is the bowling alley, where students can bowl for fun or participate in league and tournament bowling.

One flight up from the basement, one can find the Maintenance Shop. Not only does the Maintenance Shop host a variety of musicians and productions, it is perhaps the most popular spot in the Union — particularly on Friday afternoons. This little bar by the west door is usually filled to capacity on Fridays between the hours of noon and 6 p.m. In nicer weather, the Maintenance Shop moves the FAC (Friday Afternoon Club) onto the west "patio" of the Union, and always enjoys a large turnout. Maintenance Shop FAC's are fast becoming a tradition with ISU students.

Moving up to the first floor of the Union is the television room. Here, students can watch their favorite shows on large screen color television in the comfort of theater-style chairs. This room is a favorite spot for many from 2:00-3:00 to watch ISU's favorite soap opera, "General Hospital."

Movies of nearly every type are shown at various times and places in the Union. Most movies fall under the category of contemporary or classic, and are scheduled by the Student Union Board. Often these movies are free, but in most cases the movies cost from fifty cents to two dollars — still quite a bargain!

If hunger is the problem, the Union is the place.

For those with discriminating tastes and a little extra time and money to spend, there is the Campanile Dining Room. Here one can enjoy gracious dining overlooking the scenic Campanile and central campus.

For something more casual, the Commons is the answer. The Commons offers everything from a full meal to pocket-bread sandwiches to frozen yogurt.

But for those with only change in their pockets, the Trophy Tavern provides a variety of vending machines and a microwave oven for heating sandwiches and burritos. The Trophy Tavern is open all day and night for late night studiers or a quick snack on the way home from the bars.

The Union can service the student academically, also.

Paul Goss

At the beginning and end of every semester, to describe the University Book Store as "congested" would be an understatement. Perhaps the most popular bookstore in Ames, students find not only their course textbooks, but a large selection of art supplies, notebooks, cards, magazines and ISU novelties.

Just outside the Commons is a cozy place called the Browning Library. Students can study, sleep, listen to music (with headphones) or watch a movie on the video machine in the comfort of large, soft chairs and couches. Those fortunate enough to find vacant headphones in the Browning Library can listen to easy listening, rock, country-western, Broadway, jazz or classical selections. The Browning Library is open Monday through Friday 9 a.m. to 5 a.m., with extended hours during finals week.

Arts and crafts are a major part of what the Union has to offer.

The Student Union Board schedules displays, exhibits, shows and classes for viewing and participation. The craft shop located near the northeast door, the Outlet, sells works of area artists.

If a copy is all that is needed, the copy center downstairs near the bowling alley is just the place. Prices are lower than much of the competition, and copies are of good quality. For most small orders, the job can be done "while-you-wait."

The Union is also a major part of all the business transactions which take place on the ISU campus.

Many of the campus organizations have their offices located in the Union, including the Student Alumni Association, ISU Volunteers and VEISHEA. These organizations also utilize the many meeting rooms like the Sun Room, Gold Room and Cardinal Room. The largest of these rooms is the Great Hall, which hosts large events like scheduling and registration, blood drives, dances and Varieties.

Other services offered by the Union are check cashing, an electronic bank machine, postal services, and general information — Campus Information. The Union also provides hotel rooms on the upper levels which are clean, simple, and reasonably priced — an ideal solution for visiting parents.

There's quite an assortment of activities at the Memorial Union, something for almost everyone.

Off-campus, Greek housing or the residence halls; whatever your housing preferences there is something for almost everyone. With nearly fifty Greek houses, three residence associations and hundreds of student apartments, the students of ISU can manage to find places to live. It may be simple and often too small, but no matter what the circumstances it's that special place they can call home.

The fraternity is small, about thirty four members, but companionship abounds. This closeknit group retains a family atmosphere despite the up tempo pace of college life. Everyone regards each other as brothers and friends, which is vital in maintaining a strong chapter.

Acacia is the only national fraternity in the Greek name. That is, they don't use Greek letters to signify their house.

Adelante, the only fraternity which has never disbanded even in war time, celebrated its seventy-fifth year with a banquet for the returning alumni at Homecoming.

It is also the only local fraternity on campus, which means they are the only Adelante fraternity in existence and have no national chapters. The men of the fraternity make their own rules and all the money from the alumni goes directly to their house, not a national organization.

The men of Adelante are not able to visit chapters of their fraternity at other schools. However, this is only a small drawback and most of the members feel there are no disadvantages to living in a local fraternity.

Alpha Omicron Pi

Ann Klier

The Iota Sigma chapter of Alpha Omicron Pi has taken a strong holding within the university since its founding at Iowa State in the late 1960s. Behind the scenes for nearly every event, there is an AOPi actively involved. There is Homecoming, Panhellenic Council, Government of the Student Body, and the list goes on. Despite the active leadership on campus, there is a strong warm bond of sisterhood at home where each member cares for and supports each other. Alpha Omicron Pi actively supports others through their international philanthropy for arthritis research. This year a Homecoming project benefited arthritis sufferers. Arthritis is the number one crippler in Iowa.

Alpha Phi

Although the Alpha Phi house is the youngest sorority on campus, it had thirty new pledges this year, more than any other sorority.

One special event this year was the Homecoming Goreville Manor Spook House. The Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity and the Alpha Phis did this charity benefit together and all proceeds went to Mary Greeley Hospital.

"The Alpha Phis are progressive, growing and a part of the future," commented Lisa Langguth, this year's house president.

As ISU scores another touchdown, a great blast from the Alpha Sigma Phi cannon can be heard. Besides football games, the cannon is also fired at the start of Veishea activities.

Located about a block west of campus, the Alpha Sigma Phi house is quite isolated from the rest of the Greek system, but only in location. They are involved in numerous activities with other houses, including a teeter totter marathon for charity with the Gamma Phi Beta sorority, which takes place at the Oklahoma game.

ISU football wouldn't be complete without the Alpha Sigma Phi cannon. The "cannon crew" make sure it's fired after every ISU touchdown.

Alpha Tau Omega

Taking pride in yourself means giving your all, and the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity does just that. Dedicated to making their house one of the best in the nation, they brought home a number of awards from the national congress of ATO, which was held this summer.

Out of 154 chapters, they captured the top honor, "Tau Talk," an award given to the best publication of the national alumni news letter. They also received the True Merit Award, an honor given to only twenty chapters of the Alpha Tau Omega organization.

Homecoming activities were done with the Beta Sigma Psi fraternity and Varieties was with the Farmhouse fraternity.

The annual dance marathon for muscular dystrophy is a well-known event at Iowa State, and Beta Sigma Psi is behind it. The fraternity has organized the dance since its beginning ten years ago. There has always been almost one hundred percent involvement of house members in the dance, in dancing, working or both.

Beta Sigma Psi also raised money for the American Heart and Lung Association for their Homecoming service project. They sold raffle tickets with the help of the Alpha Xi Delta sorority and prizes were donated by Ames businessmen.

An interesting aspect of Beta Sigma Psi is that it is an all Lutheran fraternity — the only one like it on campus. House members worship together and usher every Sunday at the Memorial Lutheran Church on Lincoln Way. They also volunteer their time for clean up and maintenance of the church and grounds. Although attendance is not mandatory, most of the members find participation rewarding.

Beta Sigma Psi stresses athletic involvement, and volleyball seems to be their chosen sport. The house won the All University Volleyball Championship for intramurals, in the spring of '82 as well as the volleyball tournament during Greek Week.

Above: Parties prove to be excellent money raisers as Dean Bierschenk, Mark Niebuhr, and Bary Kienast have discovered. They were in charge of collecting donations for one of the house's service projects.

Varieties participation has always been strong. The fraternity has made it to the sweepstakes eight times in the last ten years.

A goal setting retreat at Lynn Fuhrer Lodge was one of the memorable experiences that the Chi Omega girls shared this year.

Family Sibling Weekend was another important event in the house. Each of the girls invited a member of her family to spend the weekend at the house.

According to Peggy Murnighan, living in the house "enhances everyone's college experience because bad times are made good and good times are made better."

Karen B. Pettie

Above: Shows such as Floppy, Hillstreet Blues, and Magnum P.I. are the necessities of life for many college students. The men of Delta Chi are no exception and find a few hours in front of the television a much needed diversion.

High academic achievement and a well rounded social calendar are mixed successfully by the men of Delta Chi. The house has been among the top three fraternities in respect to grade point average for the past two years, and was the first recipient of the floating plaque, an award which recognizes scholastic superiority.

However, in achieving these impressive results, Delta Chi has invented a few intriguing study breaks. One is the formation of the TTT Club, also known as Thursday Tork's at Ten. Close to half the house members, and occasionally a few friends, pack Tork's cramped interiors to start the weekend early.

Sitting beside the Delta Chi pool on a warm February day also dispels some of the textbook blues. The pool is actually an inflatable wading pool but the men don't seem to mind as they lounge in the sun bedecked in swim suits and sun glasses.

Delta Sigma Phi

Delta Sigma Phi offers the opportunity to socialize and to be alone. David Landon spends some time on the phone in private.

"Ash Bash," Veishea's largest outdoor party, was quite successful thanks to it's host Delta Sigma Phi. The event, which was held for the March of Dimes, welcomed four bands and over 5,000 paid attendants.

The fraternity is also very involved in Homecoming and received the "Outstanding Challenge Trophy" for their effort in the Homecoming banner and lawn display competition. Their banner, themed "Timeless Tradition," was first place among the banners and also captured the All Around Award over the first place lawn display.

Seven house members are also involved in the Little Pals program through the YMCA. Acting as big brothers, the men provide companionship to the children of divorced parents.

Delta Tau Delta

This past year the Delta Tau Delta house members were leaders both scholastically and socially on the Iowa State campus. This year they were especially proud to receive an award naming them the top Delta chapter of their national fraternity.

The past year was filled with memories they will never forget: Veistes with the Alpha Gams; Homecoming with the Sigma Kappas; Varieties with the Kappa Deltas; and service projects, tailgaters, football games, FACs, formal, and the many other fun times with their brothers. As time quickly passes, these memories will linger on.

Maintaining an open, close relationship between pledges and actives is important to the men of Delta Upsilon. The fraternity prides itself in being one of the few non-secret fraternities in the Greek system. That is, they have no secret handshakes or pass words, and they welcome the pledges to participate in house meetings.

This tight active-pledge bond has made their pledge program very strong. The house wrote a pledge manual which familiarizes the new associates with the house and helps to answer questions they may have. For their work the chapter won the national award among Delta Upsilon chapters for the best pledge program.

The fraternity is also active in Varieties, taking second place with their theme, "Adam and Eve Bite the Big Apple." The Diabetes Bike Ride, which Delta Upsilon coordinates, is their main service project. Students and Ames residents alike are encouraged to get sponsors and take part in the event.

Above: Unity among house members is important to Delta Upsilon. Large gatherings such as this one enable the men to talk about subjects of interest, which ultimately brings them closer together.

"Sunshine and shadows, laughter and tears, we'll stay together all these long years..." One of Delta Zeta's favorite songs expresses its main reason for existence — friendship. Amidst their busy individual schedules, DZs participate in a variety of activities together.

Delta Zeta has been very successful in raising money for charities and their special philanthropy, Galladet School for the Deaf. Wheeling and dealing with the men of Sigma Alpha Epsilon. Delta Zeta hosted a casino night to raise money for the Lupus Foundation. Derby Days with the Sigma Chi's was another social service highlight.

Rumor has it that Delta Zeta is a "singing" house. Varieties and Greek Sing are always a fun and rewarding time for the DZs. Second place trophies were brought home from both events last year.

Scholastic achievement is important to Delta Zeta, too. It is exemplified by membership of several DZs in Gamma Gamma, Mortar Board, various honor societies, and scholarship recipients.

Far Right: Study breaks are spent many different ways. Gretchen Spellman enjoys her spare time with Teri Reedepoint while Lisa Hugnet watches television.

Karen H. Patton

Although Farmhouse may be thought of as an agricultural fraternity, its membership includes men with a variety of majors from agronomy to electrical engineering to zoology. Farmhouse takes pride in the scholastic achievement, ranking among the top three fraternities in the fraternity grade point comparison. Farmhouse is also active in Varieties, blood drives, Greek Week, Greek Sing and numerous intramural sports.

Farmhouse seeks to develop its members intellectually, socially, physically and spiritually. Through this four-fold development, the motto "Builders of Men" is applied and helps each man to reach his full potential.

The Teeter Totter Marathon was one of the service projects that the Gamma Phi Beta sorority was involved in this year. The girls were joined by the Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity in their teeter tottering.

Kappa Sigma

To help dorm residents understand and appreciate Greek living, Kappa Sigma started a house and dorm exchange. Five men from the house and five men from Stevenson, a house in the RCA, traded places for one week in order to learn a little about the others' lifestyle, and to promote Greek-dorm relations.

Kappa Sigma has been active in the intramurals program and quite successful, too. They received second place in division C hockey and won their division volleyball tournament. They also exhibited their athletic prowess during Greek Week by winning the volleyball tournament and the All Greek Softball tournament. They hope to do as well in the spring of '83.

Kappa Sigma has also received recognition for their alumni newsletter, which won the honor of best newsletter among the chapters nationally.

Lambda Chi Alpha will once again open the doors of "Goreville Manor" to all who dare to enter. The haunted house, run by the fraternity for almost ten years, has provoked an enthusiastic student response. The house is set up in the fraternity at 203 Ash, and a small fee is charged at the door. Proceeds go to an organization of their choice, and the house members expect a large profit from the popular event.

Lambda Chi Alpha won the Greek Week university and community service project award for their outstanding participation in the Greek Week festivities. They also won the Blood Drive Trophy by having the largest percentage of members involved.

Phi Delta Theta is a social fraternity which emphasizes fellowship, scholarship and individual development. Members are involved in activities including campus organizations, intramurals and community service.

House activities such as Homecoming, Varieties and Veishea further contribute to the development of the chapter. Phi Delta Theta is an active group of diverse individuals who share a common bond called brotherhood.

Phi Gamma Delta

The 1982-83 year will offer the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity a chance to celebrate seventy-five years of service and affiliation with ISU. Although 1907 was many years past, the old precepts still hold true with every Fiji. Scholarship, brotherhood, and being part of a unified group are only a few aspirations of each member, and through individual effort, they all blend together to become a reality.

With the addition of a new chapter house, Fiji brothers are sharing the highest expectations for future achievements and recognition through the university, as well as the Ames community. This strong attitude combined with "Fiji effort" will assure their continued existence at ISU for many years to come.

held at poolside. The second annual Phi Psi 500 was the major service project. The 500 is an obstacle race and proceeds are donated to a local charity. Phi Kappa Psi continues to be a strong house thanks to the support given by its brothers and alumni.

many men are left to fend for themselves as are Jeffery Zumbach and Chris Elbey.

Phi Kappa Tau is a place where young men learn to live with the ups and downs of college life while enjoying a common bond of brotherhood.

Although it is one of the smallest fraternities on campus, it is involved in most of the campus activities. One of these is the intramural program, a big favorite of the Phi Taus. They captured a second place in volleyball and a third in soccer.

Serving the Ames community is an important function of Phi Kappa Tau. During the Christmas season, the men go caroling at various nursing homes in the area. They also volunteered their services by moving and delivering government allocated cheese for welfare families in Story County.

Cyclone Blitz, Phi Kappa Theta's biggest social event of the year, is more than a colossal party, it's a fund raising service project for charity. The party is held each fall on a Friday before a football game, so students from other colleges are able to attend.

The party made over $3500, which was given to the Variety Club of Iowa, the fraternity's major philanthropy. The Variety Club is a large charity organization like the United Way which donates money to various organizations in Iowa alone.

Phi Kappa Theta has done a lot of work for the Club including working at the Club's telethon which is held at the Adventureland Hotel in Des Moines each spring.

The fraternity has also received such distinguished awards as the Founder's Cup and the Blue Ribbon Club. The cup signifies overall excellence in a variety of categories including scholarship, community service, pledge program, and alumni program. Blue Ribbon Club acceptance is based on the amount of turnover in pledges.

"The Zoo day signified the fact that we live in a diverse house," explained Dana Wilson. As a result of the creative skills, twenty-three girls pledged the house.

Pi Kappa Alpha is rated as a top national fraternity and is recognized as a leading fraternity at Iowa State. Pikes pride themselves on a tradition of participation and involvement in many different campus activities with several of its members on Veishea, Varieties, Homecoming, Pep Council, Greek Week, Campus Chest, Student Government, and many other campus organizations.

Pikes consistently do well in all intramural events and also have members on the Iowa State varsity golf, swimming and football teams. They also proved their musical talent last year in the Varieties show by winning both 1st and 2nd place in the musical vignettes. The Pikes also won again in Veishea with their float winning both the Parade Marshall's and Grand Marshal's awards.

The Pi Kappa Alpha chapter at Iowa State was presented with a Chapter Excellence Award this last year, and one of its members, Stan Thompson, was chosen as one of the top five undergraduate members in the nation.

Everywhere you look you can see Theta Chi. You can see it in the university through its campus activities and organizations. You can see it in the community through its service projects and community involvement. And you can see Theta Chi throughout the state and nation through its network of chapters on campuses across the country.

The members of Theta Chi are lucky in that their member size enhances their diversity. The chapter, with its 60 members, is large enough to participate in all campus activities including Homecoming, Varieties, and Veishea. Yet it is small enough that the 60 members can experience the true meaning of fraternity brotherhood.

Theta Chi has been a long standing tradition with ISU and Ames. They recently celebrated their 60th anniversary on campus.

Theta Xi fraternity is proud of the fact that they have completely done away with any form of hazing in their pledge program. The associate members (as the new men are called) are more on an equal basis with the active members of the chapter. If it weren't for the associate member pins which they wear, it'd be difficult to distinguish between an active and associate member. They believe that this sense of equality has deepened the feeling of brotherhood, which is important to any fraternity, and has strengthened their fraternity as a whole.

Triangle

Triangle, a fraternity of engineers, architects and scientists has always made good scholarship a tradition. From its beginning in 1907 one of Triangle's top goals has been to provide the necessary environment for academic achievement. Academics being one part of university life though, Triangle seeks to develop involvement of its members in intramural sports, campus honor societies, university fine arts activities, house parties, Homecoming displays, and service projects. The men of Triangle stress the importance of a balanced program of academics, campus activities, and social and communal interaction in the pursuit of a liberal education and a well rounded university experience.

girl has; whether she lives in the residence halls, a sorority or off-campus."

Involvement, friendship and socializing are words used by Nancy Edwards, a sophomore in fashion merchandising, to describe her little sister relationship at the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity. "My big brother really cares about me as a person. We can count on each other for support," says Edwards.

Blair Bjorlin, a sophomore in computer science, says that her Sigma Alpha Epsilon big brother, Alan Caslavka, does everything a real big brother does.

Terry Schott of the Farmhouse fraternity, explains that their sisters are as much like real sisters as possible. "We try to recreate the brother/sister relationship found at home as closely as possible."

Kim Friedman

Little sister organizations are as diverse as the people they represent. Little sisters participation in their brother fraternities can range from very active to an occasional visit.

The little sisters of Alpha Kappa Lambda are an integral part of the AKL fraternity. Little sister president Karen Lynn, a junior in textiles and clothing, describes being an AKL little sister as "a great way to complement whatever lifestyle a

Living up

When a student becomes a member of a fraternity or sorority, he or she is assigned to an older housemember and that more experienced person becomes a "father" or "mother" to the new pledge. "Brothers" and "sisters" complete this adopted family.

A more familiar family relationship in this same setting is that of actual blood relations living in the same Greek house, either concurrently or with more than a decade separating them. These people are called legacies, and being a legacy can be a help or a hindrance when choosing the right Greek house.

Mark Cowan, a freshman in science and humanities, pledged the Phi Gamma Delta house this fall, two years after his brother Rick became a member of the fraternity. "A fraternity was the only thing I had any exposure to," says Cowan. "I came here when I was in high school and stayed with my brother. I liked the guys and the house."

Another Phi Gamma Delta member and a freshman in animal science, Dave Dosier, is a legacy in his father and uncle's fraternity. "My choice didn't have anything to do with my dad and my uncle. It was my own decision to pledge the Fiji house."

Karen B. Pattee, a triple legacy to the Kappa Alpha Theta house and a sophomore in journalism, says she felt a lot of pressure to pledge the Kappa Alpha Thetas. "I started rush determined not to pledge the house just because it was expected of me, but the Kappa Alpha Theta house came across the best during rush."

Pattee can understand why Greek houses like to get legacies to pledge. "I really like the Kappa Alpha Thetas, and would like my sister to join and carry on the legacy."

According to Chi Omega member Correen Sporer, a sophomore in industrial engineering, most Greek houses rush legacies just like any other girl.

Many people think that legacies' decisions are already made as to what house they are going to pledge because relatives have influenced them about the "best" house.

"Being a legacy didn't affect my decision at all," says Mitch Weinbeck, a sophomore in forestry and a member of the Alpha Sigma Phi house. "I had been thinking about pledging a fraternity, and I liked the Alpha Sigma Phi house for my own reasons."

Theresa McVey, a sophomore in business, pledged the Kappa Alpha Theta house even though her sister pledged the Chi Omega house. "I went through rush with a totally open mind. My sister said she would be happy if I pledged Chi Omega, but that it was my choice and she wouldn't be mad if I didn't."

Legacies are a part of ISU's history and Greek tradition. Living up to a legacy can be a tough but rewarding experience.

There are more unique aspects to life at Alumni Hall besides being fifteen seconds from central campus. The sixty men that reside there are an independent body, not under university rules, with self-appointed advisors, officers, and their own admissions chairmen. While they share Alumni Hall with the YMCA and the YWCA, they are not connected with either organization.

The building itself is a national historic landmark with three porticos overlooking the campus.

Women at Iowa State know Alumni Hall for its annual fall serenades. Each Thursday evening a pink piano and a matching pink wagon accompany the serenading men as they attempt to win the hearts of beautiful coeds.

Our annual Halloween party held in the den was a success. Spring semester included K.Q., the Dance Marathon, and other events.

Anders Angels were also active in other ways. They got "physical" not only through floor aerobics but participated in many intramural sports including volleyball, softball, basketball, badminton, and table tennis.

Looking back on the 1982-83 school year shows that strength can be found in numbers.

Diversity among members makes Anderson house special, with interests ranging from intramurals to music. Seven girls are in oratorio choir and four are in the marching band. The floor members, better known as the Angels, adopted Schaefer house as their big brother floor. Open house, a big sis-little sis program, milk maid, house picnics, and the fall hayride add to the fun of being an Anderson Angel.

Above: The women of Anderson house are set for a fall of fun and excitement. The year was started with a refreshing Havesi or Bust party, which helped set a mood for the entire semester.

Anthony

Anthony is the largest women's house in the UDA, and with that many girls they're bound to be an active floor. Each year they participate in the excitement of Veishea float building with Noble house, the only individual dormitory houses to compete in the contest. In 1982, they had the honor of winning first place in the small division and the President's Award for the best humor.

Also in the spring of each year, Anthony has their annual Easter Egg Hunt at Brookside Park. The dyed eggs and chocolate bunnies are only part of the fun.

Each week at their house meeting, the Anthony women nominate someone for the infamous Tony Award. The "lucky" recipient of this award must wear a tiger suit, complete with ears and a tail, to dinner in food service. Some dread this tradition but others claim it's a great way to catch men.

The Barker Babes were fall soccer and pushball champs. They just finished making a new house sign and their new house sweatshirts are really impressive. Barker house had a lot of new freshmen which were very active with the house. Barker had many activities in which it was involv-

Bates house and Bishop house doubled their pleasure by combining into one floor. Located on sixth floor in Willow Hall, the women of the house are known as the Bates-Bishop Bombshells. They are an energetic bunch and proved their enthusiasm by tying for second place in the Willow Hall Homecoming Cheer Contest.

The bombshells are also known to sing serenades to men's floors. One of their favorite songs, to the tune of The Wizard of Oz, goes as follows: We're all from sixth floor Willow, that wonderful, wonderful floor/ We've got all the chicks, that know all the tricks/ They'll always come back for more/ If ever a friendlier floor there was/ The ladies of sixth are one because/ Because, because, because/ Because of the wonderful things we does/ We're all from sixth floor Willow, that wonderful, wonderful, floor.

Bergman house is full of traditions, from their annual parties to their house award. The parties include a pig roast, a Christmas formal, and of course, the Screw Your Roommate Dinner Date Party. A summer reunion is also held each year which is attended by a small group of hard cores. The house award, F.U.B.A.R., is given each week to the lucky fellow who best demonstrates his stupidity. A close translation of the initials is Foiled Up Beyond All Repair.

Close knit is a term deserving of Busse house, a small floor that encourages a strong relationship between freshmen and seniors. The floor boasts an active big sis/little sis program which helps orientate the new girls to the floor and the university.

Participation in

Some floors center their house activities around one main traditional function or party. However, Cassell doesn't believe in carrying on tradition. They believe in making new ones. New activities and new points of interest make Cassell a very dynamic floor.

Cessna

Above: Sometimes music helps tedious homework go a little faster. Kevin Schmitt attempts a little accounting with the help of his stereo.

The men of Cessna are not afraid to "bleed" for a good cause. In the past few years Cessna house has won many trophies for Blood Drive participation.

Being avid sports fans, house members do well in IM's, work hard to fire up their section at ISU football games, and make life miserable for basketball teams visiting Hilton Coliseum.

Several traditions guide the activities of Cessna. Each fall they have a Halloween Born Party at a secluded spot outside of Ames. When Christmas rolls around their sister floor, Knowles, is entertained at their Christmas Formal. In March they continue their quest for the most beautiful foot on campus by sponsoring The Miss ISU Foot Contest. The year is then topped off with a steak fry prior to VeiShea.

David Rubardt

Weekends are very important for the men of Chamberlain, since it gives them a chance to kick the study habit for a while. A traditional study break is taken called TMC (Thursday Midnight Club) in a local drinking establishment, which guarantees the men a good start on the weekend.

Some of the favorite functions enjoyed by Chamberlain, besides the usual parties, are a hog roast at Hickory Grove Park, their Fourth Annual Formal, and a canoe trip in the spring.

Cranor house has a traditional reputation for being an active and cohesive floor, a tradition they continued in the 82-83 school year. Cranor received many new members, and everyone fired-up to make sure the year was filled with fun. They had many activities, including the traditional Halloween party, and they hope to start some new traditions too!

There are floors that party and then there are floors that really put on a big production. Dana house is one of those floors that make having a good time something special. For the past six years, Dana has been the home of the Belgravian Freedom Fighters, a social organization dedicated to drinking and the freedom of all people from oppression. The twenty Freedom Fighters sponsor a party each year, and also make an appearance on the Floppy Show to promote their cause.

Davidson is a unique first floor house on the north end of Helser hall. Its 61 inhabitants find themselves across the street from campus and a block away from a variety of entertainment and eating establishments. This environment allows Davidson residents to pursue their educational and social obligations with ease. With a rich academic history and its strategic position on the ISU campus, Davidson House claims admiration from Ames and all of Story County.

The men of Dodds are well known for their UDA escort service. The service started over two years ago and is very successful, getting two or three calls a night.

Casino Night is another important project for Dodds House. Held annually during Residence Hall Week, the event is organized and run by house members. This includes everything from collecting prizes from local sponsors to running the casino games.

Other house activities include the annual Veishea hogroast, Humboldt skiing trip, and the great Des Moines migration in February.

John McLaughlin

Young and vivacious, fun-loving but studious — This describes Doolittle of 1982-83. With the arrival of new women and with the returning residents, they began a fantastic year at Iowa State last fall. This past year they had a hectic social life trying to keep pace with the men of the TRA. They found pleasure in activities ranging from memorable house parties to participation in university residence activities; from painting the den windows for special occasions to intramural sports. In addition to their annual Tuck-in Service, they sold balloons for homecoming. Doolittle house has lived true to their number '1' placement in Knapp Hall through their many activities and fantastic attitude.

The women of Durian House decided to take on a new image this fall and once the forty-three new students made it through Freshman Week, they made their debut.

As the Debutantes came out of the "dungeon" (the name often given Durian), they made a name for themselves. The fun loving women made it a point to show ISU that they can party as hard as they study.

Elwood

Elwood house is rich with traditions, activities, and members with a variety of interests. Annual traditions include a fall picnic, a Halloween party, Kaleidoquiz, and a hog roast. Weekly traditions consist of giving a "house member a toilet for "house award" or a large athletic supporter for "Jack of the Week." Both honors are given to the deserving few as a result of their notable deeds.

The strength of Elwood lies in its members. Although the men of Elwood have diverse backgrounds and interests, they always pull together to have a good time.

Leading the university in social standing, Emersonites have consistently pursued the highest status in scholastics, athletics, and entertainment but not always in that order, unfortunately. The men of Emerson believe to be located high above the rubble synonymous with the majority of Iowa Staters and subject to only the purest of Central Iowa's air. Because of this, their minds are able to expand far beyond the norm possible for mere humans. Rest assured that the elected officials and world leaders of tomorrow will sprout from this veritable think-tank in the sky.

Left: A popular pastime, hacky-sack can be played almost anywhere and anytime. Emerson members Dave Brookman and Tom Hauan play an intense game between the Staters.

The home-like atmosphere of Fisher-Nickell offers a friendlier setting than regular residence halls do. The small co-ed house allows a close family environment without the rigid conformity that the Greek system requires.

The house is designed as a home, complete with a cozy den, kitchenette, and rooms that have special features. In fact, a few rooms are equipped with fireplaces, porches, sinks, or bathrooms.

Ten faculty members join the residents in occasional in-house programs and workshops which encourage personal and social development. The activities also help bring together academic and non-academic learning experiences.

Fosmark house welcomed over forty new members to the floor, and so the upper class women had their work cut out for them passing on house traditions. The house boasts an inner house sorority, Omega Bet Phi, whose activities are strictly social. Sheet tours are an original house activity which requires the participants to dress and act like tourists while checking out the sheets of the men's houses. The tours fire up the members for the annual Fosmark Fantasy party which had a Grecian theme. Members continuously contribute pennies for the house to donate to the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Fosmark is also the home of several intramural championship teams and many varsity athletes.

gives Jason Moore a little push.

Above: Some people need extra motivation when it comes to studying.

We, the men of Franklin House, work hard to preserve our intellectual and social integrity. Franklin scholars have contributed such things as the invention of the portable lunar observatory, the study of the effects of Jack Daniels on the nervous and gastrointestinal systems, and the hands-off theory of learning. We believe in science with practice ... much practice!

House activities include world champion tag team wrestling, high-tech stomper pulling, deep-sea fishing, deer hunting, and motoring on central campus. It obviously needn't be said that Franklinites keep college life interesting.

Friant

"It's not just a house, but a home for us all" is not only a motto, but a feeling for the "Foxes of Friant." Friant is always doing something, and through these activities lifetime friendships are developed. This makes living on Friant a warm experience.

The annual "Friant house dating game" is one of the activities which is most looked forward to each year. It includes the pairing up of three lucky couples who are sent to Boyd's Ice Cream for fun and excitement.

A "Save the Zoo" party is thrown each year by members of Gilman house. According to social chairperson Paul Hansen, Gilman received the nickname "the Zoo" two years ago when the floor was disbanded.

Before football games, a Jimmy Dean party consisting of beer and fruitloops is held in the den. The men of Gilman also sponsor a floor canoe trip once a year.

Right: It looks like a few of the Gilman members know where their home is but now it seems they've lost their clothes. Gilman has been noted in the past to house some pretty crazy individuals and it looks like this year is no different.

Halsted means living among 52 men who are devoted to obtaining a degree and having a good time doing it. Monday thru Friday is a good time to do a little classwork, but on Friday the books get put up on the shelf and the Bacardi gets taken off.

While living in Halsted, unity and floor loyalty is developed. They are dedicated to integrating new house members into the flow of house activities. This includes everything from the legendary three-man lift to helping entertain the young ladies who attend the even more legendary Halsted parties.

Milkmaid, and Veishea follies have brought the Harwood Hunnies trophies year after year.

Hayden

Karen B. Peltier

Serenading was the hottest craze to hit Hayden House this year. No matter what the purpose (inviting men to a crush party, firing up a brother floor, or pumpkin caroling in Larch) there were always plenty of enthused women willing to participate.

Serenading isn't all the Heartthrobs do though. Other newly formed traditions include a cabinet exchange with a men's floor, adopting grandparents from a local nursing home, open house on the floor, movie nights in the den, and educational and cultural workshops. Hayden is also famed for its "Heart Attacks" where the women invade a men's floor and plaster paper hearts everywhere to the tune of Olivia Newton John's popular song.

The Honeys from Henderson are involved socially, academically, athletically, and physically! Parties every weekend, aerobics in the den every night, watching the soaps and MASH on their brand new color television (with simulated wood grain cabinet), and upgrading their academic standing are just a few of the things that keep the Honeys humming.

Fantastic freshmen, super sophomores, jiving juniors, and squirrely seniors keep the Henderson Honeys 'hoppin' and 'boppin', rockin' and rollin' "all through the year. Invite them to your next house party!

Left: The den of every dorm house is a great gathering place for floor members. Kehlenbeck is no different as everyone gathered around the T.V. for the World Series.

Kehlenbeck was once again tops in popularity at Larch Hall, a fact well demonstrated at their parties where good times were enjoyed by many. Kehlenbeck's social traditions included a ski Kehlenbeck party and a pig roast during the Veishea weekend.

Despite the remote possibility of the famed "Wildest of all Men" losing his popularity, the "Largest of all Men" was voted on and several floor dignitaries were inducted into the newly formed Carp Club. However, if you do come looking for the "Largest of all Men" or a Carp Club member, beware of the Snyder, Cap't. Miller Man, Hotel Billy, and Wango Tango. Oh yeh, don't forget Dan the Man or Gigalo Don because they are always stalking the halls.

In the news... Kimball gains a permanent member, as the F. M. moves in... The Kimball clock disappears in the Bermuda Triangle. Its whereabouts are still unknown... An epidemic number of Kimball men were removed from the list of eligible bachelors... Roger may lose his title of Ranger Rick... Joe Buck takes a motherly interest in house affairs, while Jacob watches us like a father... Hoover goes to Minnesota... Dagmar goes to the library... Engleman goes to the Design Center... Struckman gets attacked by styrofoam... Zebe and Jer Bear are attacked by sharks... The organ player is quiet, as the words "Hey Kimball House! What time is it?" are no longer heard... Finally, Joe Buck will continue to make the world safe for democracy.

King House is located on third floor of Oak Hall and is the home of nearly 80 enthusiastic, crazy, wild women.

King has been very active in intramural sports: Volleyball, flag football, basketball, and slow pitch softball. Another sport (if you can call it that) is scoping out the guys down at food service!

A tradition on King is the weekly award given at House meetings — King Klutz. To receive this esteemed award, a person is nominated as having done something unusual or klutzy. The lucky person has to write a poem about her incident, and read it at the next meeting.

Involvement is the key to being a successful Knowles House member. Wherever things are happening on campus, energetic Knowles women are sure to be found. Members are involved in RHW, Veishea, and the house won the Campus Chest can collection this year.

Knowles House is very social. Their calendar is filled with parties, ISU Center activities, and service projects. Enthusiastic members plan their annual VD (Valentines Day) Bash, and a few POETS (Put Off Everything Tomorrow's Saturday) for fun on Friday afternoons.

While house involvement is important on Knowles, spelling isn't! Here a few Knowlites show off their Halloween garb along with their house sign.

Lancaster-Cook

Russ Roberts

Through realignment Lancaster and Cook houses joined forces to become Lancaster-Cook house, fourth floor Willow. The women of this new house do their scoping from the fourth floor, and are appropriately named 'The Scopers' and live up to their well-earned reputation while making many new friends. "Watch out they just might have their eyes on you sometime, watching your every move."

Lawther

Lawther once again made its mark at Iowa State. Many social events helped create unity within the house and introduced them to a wide variety of people.

First semester was highlighted by a hayride, North Helser Bash, and our Hillbilly Party. Second semester Lawther had a talent show, a house formal, and another house party.

The house would like to wish the best of luck to our two ISU swimmers, graduating seniors, and the many engaged women. It has been a great year!

There's no doubt about what Livingston house is to its occupants. Ask any of them, and they'll all say the same thing, that Livingston house is a place to live. Yes, it's a place to reside, a place to sleep and a place to sit. You can go out and purchase a sandwich, bring it back and eat it in your room. You can eat it by yourself or you can eat it with your roommate. And if you have a television you can watch it. Any channel you desire! You can read a book or neck with your girl. You can do anything you want to! Simplicity itself! Livingston house, a place to live... or not.

Lowe

Lowe house is the second floor of Westgate hall, suburban UDA. The floor consists of 43 women who are involved in various university activities. Some of these include marching band, RHW, and Cyclone Aides, to name a few. A number of the members also belong to honor societies such as Alpha Kappa Delta, Kappa Delta Pi, Phi Eta Sigma, and I Tappa Keg. The women of Lowe keep off the freshmen fifteen pounds by participating in many IM sports, aerobics, and by doing other extra curricular activities.

MacDonald house, located on the first floor of south Helder in the UDA, has always had a record of high academic standing. Having a broad spectrum of the majors taken by members, MacDonald house is still consistently among the top floors in the UDA and the entire university. This year is no exception.

Members are interested in areas other than study too. These range from intramural sports to civic activities. With all these obligations, Mac house men consider themselves "still able to party with the best".

Klaus Kuehler

Left: House awards vary from house to house. Klaus Kuehler, MacDonald house, holds the house award, the famous fourth award.

McGlade

Many refreshing ideas have come to McGlade house thanks to the industrious new faces. Since one-half the floor is new, many activities were planned to get the old and new members acquainted. These get-togethers included a few Big Sis Little Sis functions and a room open house. Getting pinned or engaged seemed to be popular, and as a result, there were quite a few candlepassings. Meanwhile, the rest of the floor kept busy with other social activities with their brother floor.

Meeker house is like all coed houses in that it provides a place for men and women to share a floor and its responsibilities while pursuing their college careers. As one of the largest houses in the residence hall system, Meeker has a good cross section of the university's population. It has representatives from all of the colleges on campus, nine states and three countries. This combination provides house members with exposure to many varied ideas and values.

The coed atmosphere on Meeker seems to generate a more rapid growth of maturity and responsibility in its members.

Coed living provides freshmen with many opportunities to become involved with the house. The house cabinet is one of the few on campus that includes freshmen representatives and their input.

Above: Members of Meeker house gather in the den for a few hours of passive entertainment before hitting the books. The event brings out some strange qualities in a few of the viewers.

Merchant

The best merchants in town are on Merchant floor. If anyone attended the 2nd Annual Pimp and Prostitute Party, you would have been able to see the truth to this. But be careful if you are on 2nd floor Elm Hall, because if you do something stupid you will receive the 'moon award' and if you do something nice you may receive the 'sweethearts award'.

Right: Friendships make other problems disappear. April Quattropini and Pat Sheeran spend time together away from books.

The competitive spirit is alive and well with the men of Merrill house. They have consistently placed in the top 10 of the annual Kaleidoquiz contest, and have collaborated with other houses in Linden Hall to form the Dance Demons, a spirit-winning group in the Dance Marathon. This year they will be the only dorm group entered in Varieties. The house also holds its own "Intra-Merrill" tournaments in golf and soccer. Socially, Jesse's Birthday Party and the annual Christmas Party are the big highlights of the year.

Above: Anything done with friends is more fun. Miller women always have time to spend with each other.

With more than fifty new members, "a little old and a lot of new" best describes Miller floor in '82-'83. The new members are quickly introduced into the "Miller Life" with a week of activities at the beginning of the school year. As the year progresses, Millerites get involved in many campus organizations and floor activities, while academics are still a priority.

Some highlights of the fall were a successful barn party and intramural flag football and soccer championships. They are looking forward to the remainder of the year with high expectations.

Mortensen

David Rehweider

The success which Mortensen house enjoys can be attributed to responsibility and cooperation. Not many groups of this size get along together as well as the men of Mortensen. While academics are most important, socializing runs a close second.

Favorite pastimes include Cyclone football, 76er's basketball, poker and arguments over whether or not Reggie Jackson really does eat quiche.

The men of Murray house placed in the top five Class C champs for intramural flag football this past fall.

Three big parties are on Murray's list of activities each year. The year started out with a barn party at Baker's Acres which, according to president Dave Hillman, was a "barn burner of a party." They also throw a Halloween party and a "Murray Christmas" party.

Nelson

Klaus Kocher

Nelson house offers a living experience quite different from that found anywhere else in the Union Drive Association. The girls who live on the floor like the comfort of having the rooms divided into suites. Between every two rooms is a bathroom, which saves the floor members the hassle and embarrassment of walking down the hall in their bathrobes and curlers carrying a bucket full of necessities.

The reaction most girls get when they tell someone they are from Westgate is a moan about the walk they have to get to the cafeteria located two blocks from their dorm. But the Nelson girls smile and simply tell the person that the walk is good exercise and it very quickly makes them realize the true quality of Friley food.

Norman house's most outstanding feature of the past two years has been their involvement in unique social events. From throwing a Christmas party in September to attempting to sell part of Helsen (all space occupied by Norman house). This year a tribute to the house mascot was installed. Entitled the "Llama Lounge" it signifies their undying loyalty to the university. The house's overall grade point also reflects their high social achievements. Oh well, there's always next year for settling down... maybe.

President Kevin Howard describes the men of Otopalik, nicknamed the Aliens, as "close guys who get along and are out to have a good time."

For the past three years, the guys on the floor held a tailgater for just the floor members down at the stadium. "We usually attract a lot of people," says Howard. FACs are also popular with Otopalik. About $700 is put aside for them.

FRONT ROW: Mehri Aryanpur, Zeldeth Del Choy, Sangeeta Bhatnagar, Judith Hayes, Linda Lyngholm, Angie Soerer, Julie Nelson, Kassi McClintock, Elaine Egan, Linda Buchfinck, Deb Bachman.
SECOND ROW: Amy Wilson, Kathy Sciorrotta, Lynne Gravett, Sue DeBlauw, Kindra Kolsto, Sarah Hahn, Beth Wirkler, Mary Kleis, Marita Hart, Leanne Bieri, JuliAnne Walter, Karla Knipper, Susan Broghammer, Julie Roach, Rosa Ciniglio, Diana Vandermillen.
THIRD ROW: Karen Salvesson, Lisa George, Gwendolyn Ott, Pam Manternach, Bev Landt, Janet Determann, Missy Karnes, Elizabeth Orsay, Lisa Moklestad, Sharry Rolles, Lynn Bates, Lori Vaughan, Marianne Stoppelmoor, Londa Leeds.

Enthusiastic is the best way to describe Palmer house. Besides winning first place for their Varieties skit last year, the house did well in many other contests. With over twenty members participating in the MD Dance Marathon, they have won the "most spirited" award with Pearson house in the past. House members are also very close through their Big Sis/Little Sis program, their annual house picnic, hall exchanges and their "Santa's Elves" Christmas tradition.

Left: Late at night strange things begin to happen on Palmer. A group of reargistic girls put self studying just a little longer for some craziness in the halls.

The men of Pearson House are a very active bunch. On football Saturdays, members of the house roll out at 6:00 AM to put up flags along Lincoln Way. The annual Des Moines Run is another of Pearson's activities. This involves a sprint relay from Ames to Des Moines to deliver the Veishea invitation from President Parks to the Governor. Pearson has run this relay for the past fifteen years.

Rambo

The women of Rambo took canoes out on Lake Laverne and attempted to clean at least the surface area for their fall project, says Kammy Spencer, house president.

They had a vacation party with the men of Webber and every home game, they held tailgates with the men of Sage.

In the fall, Rothacker got together with the men of Mashack and had a Mashathacker "function." This cost each floor around $200.

The year has been very active for the men of Sage. A larger percentage of floor members participated in intramural sports which resulted in a soccer championship in the fall. Sage also broadened its social horizons by starting a new tradition: a party every weekend. The floor also surpassed its previous number of tailgates, dinner exchanges and assorted revelries. Due to circumstances beyond their control, however, more members were framed by the Resident Assistant police and sent to maximum security institutions (Lenore's room). Oh yeah, SAGE RULES!

Above: Its time for another wild episode of MASH, and cubs are packed with loyal viewers all over campus. Sage is no exception and the men are obviously deeply involved.

Schaefer, located on fifth floor Willow Hall, is one of two new men's houses established this year to increase residence hall housing available to men. The house is named in honor of Benjamin Schaefer, a former Iowa State physical plant supervisor, who died in 1965.

Schaefer is composed of upper classmen from all three associations and twenty new students.

Roger Stoker, president of Schaefer, said, "We had a lot of top quality individuals move onto the floor. Due to their enthusiasm and new ideas, we got off to a very successful start and have great potential to break new ground in the future."

This year was the unveiling of the Shilling Sweethearts' new house award, "The Space Case." The girls had a few extra yards of this material (it's a long story) and so over the summer a white suit with green satin trim was produced. Each week the lucky winner gets to wear the outfit to dinner.

The Sweethearts are a fun loving and active group. Many floor members are sports minded and so there is usually a team participating in intramurals. The floor hasn't won any shirts yet but they have chalked up at least five "almost wins."

The Sweethearts also participate in the dance marathon and blood drives. They have a brother floor, exercise every night, host a floor slumber party and the annual cowboy and indian party.

Sims house has had a very busy and exciting year. Along with their brother house, Phi Kappa Tau, they painted a banner for homecoming, had a bottle auction, an FAC, parties, they went to the movies and had many other enjoyable activities. In November, the den was painted and redecorated with new chairs and a new color T.V. As a service project the old T.V. was donated to the Youth and Shelter Services of Ames.

January was the time for Fathers' Weekend; and Mothers' Weekend was in April. Both included a Saturday morning welcome where everyone got to know each other and brunch on Sunday was a great way to end two fantastic weekends.

Stange house is proud of the strong feeling of comradeship among its members.

"We really have a lot of participation at all of our activities," says house president Steve Oliver. "The guys get especially fired up for our house parties which have a fairly outstanding reputation of excellence."

Lively house meetings center around the CHOAD AWARD. The recipient of the award receives a large trundle (complete with rim) to decorate his room for a week.

Stange would like to end with an open invitation to ladies to come and experience it. Stange rara avis. When you say Stange, you've said it all.

There is a house in the RCA they call Stevenson. It's been the ruin of many a pool boy... They are also active in student government with two GSB Senators and the RCA president elected from the house within the last two years.

Stewart

Stewart house, the bachelor penthouse atop Linden hall, is a floor dedicated to squeezing the best out of residence hall living. Chockfull of tradition, Stewartoids reverently ponder the squirrel hide proudly hanging in the den — a legacy from the class of '63. Today's men of Stewart are rapidly building their own traditions as a floor to be reckoned as a center of great fun.

Tappan

For the people who haven't met the women of Tappan — they are the ones who live on the top two floors of the building with the white pillars at the top of Richardson Court. Those who have only heard about them may be a bit confused. Tappan women are also known as Tappan Terrors, Awesome Tappan Raiders, Clara's Girls, '79 and '80 K.Q. Champs, and the Space Cadet Boogie Patrol. Only those who have met them know that this odd assortment of names represents their enthusiasm and involvement in intramural sports, silent raids, and annual Pimp and Prostitute Party complete with Showtime, Kaleidoquiz and the MDA Dance Marathon.

The fall celebration of Homecoming is observed in Tilden house each year as the women team up with a men's floor to compete in the Banner Contest. The ladies break the midwinter monotony as they get a chance to exercise their trivia skills by participating in the Kaleids Quiz contest sponsored by KPGY.

Speaking of exercise, the women of Tilden house like to stay in shape during the year by engaging in the many intramural team sports offered by the university.

The school year is rounded out when the ladies hold a Mothers' Weekend in the spring. This is a special weekend to the Tilden women because it is their chance to show their moms exactly how much fun living in Tilden house can be.

No matter what season it is, the women from Tilden house are sure to be doing something exciting.

The women of Turner will do just about anything for a fun time, including cabinet exchanges, tubbing and scoping from the den windows. The den is full of girls at noon watching soaps. Some house members have been known to schedule their classes around some soaps. The house awards include Woman-of-the-Week, and Man and/or Animal-of-the-Week.

Turner women enjoy yearly traditions of dead week ice cream, killer broomball, and softball. The women of Turner like it on top because "we're worth the climb."

Vollmer

Quiet, noisy, stubborn, easy-going, serious, wild... Every woman of Vollmer has a unique quality which makes their family one-of-a-kind. In the spring of '82, they combined their enthusiasm with the men of Chamberlain and won first place overall in the Milkmaid Contest. Their winning spirit carried over to the fall when they joined in the annual Milkmaid Contest, receiving ribbons for house participation, milk consumption and costume, and a trophy for first place overall. Also, the Billboard "board walkers" had a "monopolizing" time dancing during the annual Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon. All in all, the women of Vollmer had a rewarding, memorable year.

... "Hey, we're from Walls house, give us a beer, tell all the men that the Wild Women are here. We're not from the IIDA nor TRA, we're right in the middle of RCA and Maple Hall is where we stay." They have a very active floor ranging from having high academic standards to being social butterflies, from athletics to theatre involvement to campus organizations. great deal of time and pride behind it. The men are proud and gregarious, qualities which play an important role in maintaining floor unity. Togetherness is the key word and all house members are encouraged to take part in the activities.

There is a house in Maple Hall, they call the house of Young. A breathtaking view, extra high ceilings for lofts, and relaxing waits for the 'vators are all pluses for living in the Young Lovers Penthouse. Besides the material value of the 8th floor, Maple they possess a special bond between the floor members. Super people make up the house.

They have girls striving for intramural T-shirts, enthusiastic freshmen and active upper classmen. As a whole they have the 3rd highest GPA in the RCA, they have parties with themes of "Party 'till it hurts", they cater in tacos, and show motion pictures. It's been the ruin of many a poor girl! Thank God, they are glad they are Young Lovers.

RA:

Responsible Assistant

The most well-known person in any residence hall is the resident assistant, better known as the RA. Students who live in residence halls have differing opinions of RAs, depending on their contact with them. But what do RAs think of their jobs?

Ann Coppernoll, coordinator of Residence Life at Towers Residence Association, defines RAs as "paraprofessionals acting as liaisons between students and the department of residence." Coppernoll stresses that an RA is a resource person to the members of a house. "We encourage persons living in the dorms to take responsibility for their lives, and to use the residence assistant as a go-between in situations where the RA is involved."

Coppernoll explained that prospective RAs are screened in a two-step process in which their performances are monitored in a group situation and in an individual interview. "We look for individuals that have the potential to develop their communication skills, leadership initiative, and orientation toward others."

Deb Bailey, a junior in family environment and an RA for Schmidt house, says that being an RA develops one's confidence, self-awareness and sense of responsibility. "My duties as an RA have given me one of the best educational experiences college has yet offered."

Bailey also says that the advantages of free room and board and the opportunity to meet many different people far outweigh any disadvantages of the job.

Dave Lloyd, a senior in civil engineering and an RA for Bergman house, explains that being an RA takes quite a bit of time as one is expected to be readily available for at least fifteen hours a week. "Sometimes the time involved with being an RA can put a strain on time spent on homework."

As an experienced RA of three years, Lloyd stresses that he really enjoys being a resident assistant. "It's a great chance to get to know a lot of people, and I've learned quite a bit about myself and others."

Lynn Harding, a senior in distributed studies and an RA for Young house, says that as a RA one has a difficult time dealing with the fact that she is an RA. "Some people have a hard time handling the switch from student to authority figure when I have to do something as an RA."

Harding agrees that being an RA takes quite a bit of time, but feels it is worth it in terms of the number of new people you meet, and the new experiences available. "I highly recommend it to anyone interested in applying to be an RA. I love feeling like a very informed person in the residence halls."

Living with

There are several different living options available to ISU students. Two of the most popular, and in some cases the least compatible, are the Greek system and the residence hall system. This fall, in an effort to help establish more favorable relations between the two, a Greek/dorm living exchange took place.

Tom Favale, vice president of the Inter Residence Hall Association, along with Margaret Beaudry, vice president of the Panellenic Council, and Doug Bass, Fraternity Council vice president, were the promoters for the six-day exchange.

Coreen Sporer, a sophomore in industrial engineering and a member of the Chi Omega sorority, got a taste of life in the dorms by living on Lovelace, a house in the Towers Residence Association. Sporer participated in a house meeting, a dinner exchange and a house party.

Sporer found that there was more freedom in the residence halls concerning alcohol and male visitation, but the women had a tendency to stay in their own rooms more.

"I think it's beneficial for girls living in the dorms to live in a sorority," says Sporer. "I moved off-campus to give more girls an opportunity to move into the Chi Omega house."

Roger Stoker, a junior in business and a resident of Schaefer house in the Richardson Court Association, had Rick Madlom, a sophomore in computer science and a member of Tau Kappa Epsilon, as his guest for the week. One of Stoker's roommates also participated in the exchange and was living in a fraternity, so Madlom was able to fit right in.

Madlom explains that "dorm life was much better than what rumor made it out to be." Stoker also got a glimpse of Greek life when Madlom gave him a tour of the TKE house.

Karen Schwartz, a freshman in electrical engineering and a member of Fosmark house in the RCA, was going through informal rush at the same time she was living in Kappa Alpha Theta for the exchange.

"The exchange gave me a good experience about meeting a lot of people and living in a sorority house," says Schwartz. "It exposed me to the cold air dorms and the alarm clocks that start ringing at six in the morning." continue to pg 263

Dave Gerdis' exchange experience was a unique one. Gerdis, a senior in finance, lived in the residence halls for three years and decided to pledge Phi Kappa Tau his senior year. For his exchange, Gerdis returned to his old floor.

"I wanted something totally different and I didn't want to live in an apartment," explains Gerdis. "I had always wondered what living in a fraternity was like."

The main difference between the residence system and fraternities is the amount of cooperation and spirit explained Gerdis. "On the dorm floor, I didn't have to get involved, but in a fraternity, you grow by getting involved."

Favale handed out a questionnaire asking the participants why they got involved with the exchange. "Most of them said that they wanted to see if the stereotypes were true about the dorms and the Greek houses," says Favale. Most of the participants couldn't tell much of a difference at all, and said that most of the rumors were unfounded.

Tennessee

A Nashville World's Fair crowd of over 90,000 people watched Tennessee kick its way to a 23-21 victory over Iowa State. Fred Reveiz booted three field goals including a fifty-two yarder with 4:12 to play to come from behind and beat the Cyclones. Turnovers also played a major role in the game with ISU having three fumbles and an interception while the Volunteers of Tennessee had none.

The first turnover came early in the first period when Harold Brown fumbled on the Iowa State 13-yard line. Tennessee recovered and later drove to the ISU 1-yard line where they scored with a one yard touchdown pass. The extra point was good which made the score 7-0.

With 1:10 gone in the first quarter, sophomore tailback Tommy Davis provided the most exciting play of the game. Davis rambled for a seventy-five yard touchdown run which tied the score at seven points a piece. Davis finished the game with 169 yards on eighteen carries. As a team the Cyclones outrushed the Vols with 265 yards to their seventy-two.

Fred Reveiz kicked his first field goal of the day from thirty-two yards out with 6:29 left in the first half. That was the total scoring for the first half which made it 10-

7, Tennessee.

ISU was first to get on the scoreboard in the second half on a five yard run by junior college transfer Harold Brown. The touchdown came with just over eleven minutes left in the third quarter making it 14-10, Iowa State. Seven minutes later, Ken Jones caught his second touchdown pass of the game to turn it into a three point lead for Tennessee.

One minute into the fourth quarter, Cyclone starting quarterback David Archer had the wind knocked out of him and had to leave the field. Reserve quarterback Jon English came in and promptly fired a fourteen yard scoring strike to give ISU a 21-17 edge.

On their next drive, Tennessee cut the Cyclone lead to one point with a twenty one yard field goal by Reveiz. This set the stage for Reveiz's final field goal. With just four minutes to play, this fifty-two yarder put the Vols up 23-21.

Bounce Back After Heartbreaker

Drake

The Drake Bulldogs came into Iowa State's home opener with a diversified attack. Drake, led by All-American tailback Amero Ware and strongarmed passer Gary Yagelski, appeared to pose problems for the Cyclones. It turned out to be a different story with the nationally ranked Cyclone defense holding Amero Ware and the Drake Bulldog backfield to just eighty-two yards total rushing.

Although Ware and the Bulldogs were shut down, the Cyclone backfield amassed 288 total rushing yards. Tommy Davis sliced through the Drake defenders for 147 yards and one touchdown. Harold Brown gracefully eluded the Bulldog linebackers for fifty-nine yards on five carries and two touchdowns. On one carry in the middle of the fourth quarter, Jason Jacobs left thirty-four yards worth of Drake defenders on a pile-driving touchdown run, so reminiscent of ex-Cyclone, All-American Dwayne Crutchfield.

Brown's first touchdown came with five minutes left in the first quarter. The twenty-four yard touchdown run gave the Cyclones a 7-0 lead. Just before the end of the quarter, David Archer threw a nine yard touchdown pass to fleet-footed Frankie Leaks. At the beginning of the second quarter it was Tommy Davis who found the end zone on a nine yard jaunt. The Cyclones built up a 21-0 lead within a seven minute period. Drake finished out the first half with a twenty-five yard field goal.

The field goal seemed to give the Bulldogs a lift as they came out with a stiff defense effort. Midway through the third quarter, Ware scored on a one yard plunge to cut the Cyclone lead to 21-10. The score by the Bulldogs seemed to liven the Cyclone defense led by Shamus McDonough's ten solo tackles.

Towards the end of the third quarter, Harold Brown scored his second touchdown of the game with a run from five yards out. The game scoring was topped off by the thirty-four yard touchdown run by Jason Jacobs at the midway point in the fourth quarter. Iowa State kicker Alex Giffords connected on all five extra point tries as the Cyclones posted an impressive 35-10 win.

Kent State

Harold Brown's 242 yards and three touchdowns led the Cyclones in a 4-47 thrashing of the Kent State Flashes. Brown's performance was partially marred by the post-game comments of Ed Cheblek, Kent State's head coach.

Cheblek accused Donnie Duncan of purposefully running up the score, calling the Cyclone's performance in the final two minutes "totally bush." Cheblek was referring to a broken play with forty-eight seconds to play that enabled Iowa State freshman Al Watson to score on a twenty-five yard run.

Duncan replied, "Watson is a fourth team tailback who scored on a play we've never run before. It came on a missed handoff to the fullback and then a pitch."

Brown compiled the Big Eight's fifteenth best rushing performance. Brown carried the ball thirty-seven times, ten more than the whole Kent State team. The Golden Flashes were held to negative seven yards rushing, the Cyclone line was just too much for their foes of the Mid-American conference.

Alex Giffords hit on field goals of twenty-five, twenty-one, and fifty-five yards. The fifty-five yarder was accompanied by a strong wind, but he cleared the uprights by a sizeable margin. Defensive end Lester Williams recovered a Kent State fumble in the end zone for a touchdown which made the score 37-7. The final score made by freshman Al Watson was 44-7, Cyclones. This was the final game of the Iowa State-Kent State series.

Fan-tastic Fan-atics fan n. (short for fanatic) 1. an enthusiastic devotee (as of a sport or a performing art) usually as a spectator, 2. an ardent admirer or enthusiast.

They come in different shapes and sizes. They are young and old. They wear outlandish clothes and paint their bodies multiple colors. They are the fans.

Clothed in red and gold, the ISU football fans spent five Saturday afternoons together at No Name stadium cheering on the team. Some followed the team to different parts of the country and state in buses, vans and cars to watch their team play football.

Enthusiastic? You bet! ISU fans spend a lot of time at the football games on their feet, doing cheers with the cheer squad or watching the team.

Why do these people bear cold weather, heat and rain to see Coach Donnie Duncan and his crew go to work on another team?

Sophomore Gina Tidwell said, "I enjoy watching football and the ISU football team makes me proud to be an Iowa State student."

HAWKS Fall Victim to Superior Defense

Iowa

"Our defense was magnificent. It not only took skill, but it took guts to win this game." ISU head football coach Donnie Duncan said after the Cyclones put the Iowa Hawkeyes under for the third straight year.

ISU's 19-7 victory was won by the hungry Cyclone defense, the foot of Alex Giffords and the finesse of Frankie Leaks.

The ISU defense held Iowa to four first downs, fourteen yards in the second half, and held them scoreless for three hard fought quarters. Iowa scored their lone touchdown on an interception by sophomore Tony Wancket. Wancket intercepted a David Archer pass and galloped twenty-six yards into the end zone for the score. The touchdown came with 7:18 left in the first quarter and made the score 7-0.

For the next three quarters, Alex Giffords' toe controlled the scoring of the game. Giffords connected on a total of four field goals, tying Iowa State and Kinnick Stadium records. With 12:31 left in the half, Giffords launched his first three-pointer into a 12 mile-per-hour wind and through the uprights. That ended the first half scoring and the score stood at 7-3 in favor of the Hawkeyes.

The only time the Hawkeyes were even close to the goal line in the second half was when they were watching the Cyclones score. Giffords' next field goal came with 5:06 left in the third quarter as he made a thirty-two yard effort. This made the score 7-6 in favor of the Hawkeyes.

Giffords' next field goal from the 25-yard line was completed with 2:11 gone in the fourth quarter. That was the score that put the Cyclones up for good. Giffords then made his record ying kick with 11:06 left in the quarter. This kick was good from twenty-four yards and gave the Cyclones a 12-7 lead. With 7:33 left in the game, David

Paul Gray

Archer fired a forty-six yard strike on the sidelines to Frankie Leaks. Leaks caught the ball, faked, and headed up the field. He then juked and jived past two more Hawkeye defenders and waltzed into the end zone, making the score 19-7.

Iowa City turned colors from the rose color of the previous Rose Bowl year to the bright cardinal of the victorious Cyclones. For the third straight year the Cyclones claimed the bragging rights as to who was the best team in the state.

It was an emotional moment in the ISU locker room after the game as Donnie Duncan presented the game ball to athletic director Lou McCullough. McCullough, who announced that he would be retiring at the end of the year, said, "I'll treasure this the rest of my life."

Oklahoma

The Oklahoma Sooners came into Ames on the second day of October with one thing in mind: TO WIN! Although they toppled the Cyclones 13-3, the game wasn't as exciting as it might have been. Iowa State had trouble getting the ball into the end zone and wasted a number of key opportunities. This also could be accredited to the fine Sooner defense which held the Cyclones to 170 total yards. It was the first game of the season that the Iowa State offense didn't put a touchdown on the board.

The Sooners switched their offense from a wishbone to a power "I" and caught the Cyclones off guard. On the Sooners' first substantial series they took the ball ninety-four yards on eighteen plays. The drive was capped off by a one yard touchdown plunge by Oklahoma's starting tailback Stanley Wilson. Michael Keeling's extra point attempt was good which made the score 7-0, Oklahoma.

On the very next drive the Cyclones scored their only points of the game. Alex Giffords booted a field goal from the Oklahoma twenty-eight to make the score 7-3. The field goal occurred at the beginning of the second quarter and the ball went back and forth until just before the end of the half. With thirteen seconds remaining, it was fourth and six at the Iowa State forty-nine yard line. Michael Keeling went into punt formation. The Cyclones had twelve men on the field and instead of getting the ball with just seconds left, Oklahoma had a first down on the Cyclone thirty-four.

Quarterback Kelly Pnelps then followed with a twenty-nine yard pass to Paul Clovis. The completion put the ball on the five with five seconds to play in the half. Keeling then kicked a field goal to make it 10-3 as the half ended.

No further scoring came until the fourth quarter when Keeling kicked a thirty-four yard field goal to make the final tally 13-3, Oklahoma. Although the Cyclone offense couldn't get off the ground, the defense held its own. Chris Washington led the team with eleven solo tackles and eight assists. Shamus McDonough had a total of sixteen solos and assists, and he also blocked a field goal.

Missouri

The Missouri Tigers blew a 14-0 lead to a gritty ISU Cyclone team which mustered out a 17-17 tie. The Missouri crowd was somewhat disappointed because they tied the week before with Kansas State.

"I told our football team we've had a lot of great victories, but I haven't been proud of them this year than I was today," said ISU Coach Donnie Duncan. "I'm heartbroken we didn't win, but I'm proud of the way we played."

The Cyclones found themselves in a hole early in the first quarter. Harold Brown tumbled on the Cyclone's second play from the line of scrimmage. Missouri recovered at the ISU fifteen yard line. Five plays later, Missouri quarterback Brad Perry plunged in from the three yard line. Later in the first period, Perry fired a fifty-one yard scoring strike to Curtland Thomas to make the score 14-0.

ISU then received a break with twenty-one seconds to go in the half. James Laver mistakenly touched Kelly Goodburn's punt and Cyclone Jim Luebbers recovered the ball at the one-yard line. After Tommy Davis was thrown for a three-yard loss Dave Archer tossed a four-yard scoring strike to fullback Jason Jacobs with nine seconds left in the half.

With 14:59 left in the third quarter the crowd witnessed a punting war between ISU's Kelly Goodburn and Missouri's Marion Adler.

With one second left in the period, ISU place kicker, Alex Giffords decided it was his turn to kick the football and put a thirty-nine yard field goal through the upright to make it 14-10.

On the play preceding the field goal, Frankie Leaks appeared to catch a twenty-two yard touchdown pass from Archer. It looked as though Leaks had maintained control of the football, but the official ruled that he juggled the football and that the catch was incomplete.

With 11:40 left in the game, Missouri scored their final points of the game. Brad Burditt connected on a twenty-six yard field goal that made the score 17-10.

The Cyclones battled back and tailback Harold Brown forged the goal line to kneel the score at 17-17.

The Cyclones were dealt a severe blow on a roughing the kicker penalty. ISU's Kelly Goodburn suffered a bone fracture in his left leg. The Cyclones were left with a 32-1 record going into the Colorado game.

Nationally Ranked Defense

Colorado

The Cyclones scored their first Big Eight victory with a score of 31-14 over Colorado and injury-riddled Rocky Gillis made some of it happen. Gillis has had knee surgery three times during his football career and was about to give it up when he came back three weeks into the season. Gillis caught back to back passes of forty-one and thirty-six yards from quarterback David Archer, who also had a brilliant performance.

Archer threw for 249 of the 571 total yards amassed by the Cyclone offense.

"Archer threw tremendously well," said Donnie Duncan. "Colorado changed defenses every time and Dave was put into audible situations on many occasions. But he handled things."

The Cyclone offense also had a solid rushing effort with Tommy Davis and Jason Jacobs both having 100-plus yards and a third string tailback getting eighty yards.

ISU was playing for the first time with a new punter, walk-on sophomore Doug Myers from Sac City, Iowa. Myers had a punt blocked that resulted in a Colorado touchdown, but later it was said that it was a missed block on the line. Otherwise, Myers boasts a forty-nine yard average for the game with his longest punt traveling sixty-one plus yards.

The Cyclones did the only scoring of the first quarter on a fifteen yard run by King Green to give the Cyclones a 7-0 advantage. With 7:47 remaining in the second quarter, Victor Scott blocked Myers' punt and Danny McMillen scooped it up and ran it into the endzone to tie the score 7-7.

With 2:09 remaining in the half, Dave Archer scampered ten yards for a score to make it 14-7, Cyclones. The Buffaloes then made it 14-14 on a brilliant two-play eighty-four yard touchdown drive that caught ISU with its coverage down. Richard Johnson scored on the second play of that drive with a dazzling four yard touchdown run with 1:42 left in the half.

ISU controlled the second half by outscoring the Buffaloes 17-0. With 3:43 left in the third quarter, Archer launched a forty-one yard touchdown pass to Gillis to make the score 21-14. Archer then used the same play on the next series of downs and converted it into a thirty-six yard touchdown to Gillis with twenty-four seconds left in the quarter. Interference was called on the play, but Gillis made the catch despite the illegal maneuver. Alex Giffords put on the final touches with a twenty-eight yard field goal in the final period to make it a 31-14 victory.

Kansas State

The homecoming game was not anything to write home about. The Cyclones and the Wildcats of Kansas State came into the game with similar records and bowl hopes. Unfortunately it was the Cyclones who watched three field goals by Steve Willis travel through the uprights enroute to a 9-3 Kansas State victory.

The Wildcat defense, led by spectacular standout Reggie Singletary, sacked quarterback David Archer seven times and intercepted two of his passes. The Cyclone rushing unit was held to a meager sixty yards on forty-two carries.

Although the offense didn't show up on Saturday, the nationally ranked defense did. Five Iowa State defensive players had six or more solo tackles. Chris Washington led the defense with seven solos and seven assists.

On Iowa State's first possession of the game, the Cyclones fumbled twice in the first three plays. The first time Archer fumbled, but tight end Doran Geise recovered the ball for only a seven yard loss. The second time Jerry Lorenzen and Archer missed the handoff and Kansas State's Jack Williamson recovered the football at the sixteen yard line. The Wildcats then moved eight yards in three plays and Willis booted a twenty five yard field goal.

Later in the first quarter, Archer and Frankie Leaks combined for a twenty-seven yard pass to set up a thirty-eight yard tying field goal by Alex Giffords. Leaks had three receptions on the day for seventy-three yards in the front of the homecoming crowd of over 52,000.

Iowa State's punter, Doug Myers, did a good job filling in for the injured Kelly Goodburn. Myers booted the ball six times with a forty six yard average.

Willis then launched a forty-five yard field goal to make the score 6-3. John Arnaud then pulled down Mike Wallace who just caught a sixty-eight yard pass that advanced the Wildcats to the nine yard line. Willis later kicked the field goal that made the score 9-3, Kansas State.

The Cyclones worked their way down to the Wildcat twenty-seven on a thirty-seven yard pass from Archer to Leaks. Iowa State then lost a total of ten yards on the next three plays and succumbed to defeat.

Kansas

Entering the game with a 1-52 record, the Jayhawks of Kansas dealt Donnie Duncan and the Cyclones another November loss. Since Duncan has been at the helm of the Cyclone gridgers, they have compiled a sickly 2-10 record in the month of November for the last three years. The Jayhawks rolled in the second half for a 24-17 win over the Cyclones.

Going into the game, the Jayhawks were ranked ninety-sixth among ninety-seven teams in Division One against the rush. Early on, the Kansas defense showed why, as the Cyclones marched sixty-five yards in twelve plays to score the first touchdown of the game, making it 7-0.

Later in the first quarter, linebacker George Jessen leveled Kansas tailback Robert Minns and caused a knee ball. The fumble was pounced on by the defensive end Lester Williams on the Kansas 39-yardline, and it looked as though the Cyclones were on their way to victory.

The Cyclones rushing unit took the ball down to the 1-yard line. On third down and goal to go, King Green fumbled in the end zone and Kansas recovered for the touchback. Even though the play happened so early in the game, it looked as though it took the wind out of the Cyclones' sails. Kansas took the ball at their 20-yard line and mowed eighty yards for the tying score.

After an exchange of possessions, ISU quickly moved sixty-one yards in five plays to make the score 14-7, Cyclones out in front.

To start the second half, the Jayhawks rolled eighty-three yards in nine plays to knot the score at 14-14. Later in the quarter, the Jayhawks scored again, this time in the form of a twenty-five yard field goal to make the score 17-14, Kansas.

With 9:36 left in the game, Alex Giffords kicked his fortieth field goal and tied the Big Eight record for most field goals in a career.

"Right now, I feel no degree of accomplishment," Giffords said. "I had a perfect day and tied the record and it doesn't mean anything."

The Jayhawks started their winning drive with 5:14 left. Kansas quarterback, Frank Suerer had two long completions and finally had the ball plunged in from the one yard line to seal the Cyclone's fate. The Cyclones had a 4-4-1 record following the game.

Nebraska

The Nebraska football team blew into town with fifteen mph winds and twenty-two degree weather and blew back out claiming a 48-10 victory over the Iowa State Cyclones Saturday, November 13.

The Cornhuskers came into the game leading the nation in rushing offense, total offense and scoring. They were coming off of their fifth straight win and were ranked number three in the nation by the United Press International poll.

ISU, however, was not lacking in their claim to fame as they came into the game with the Big Eight's number one defense. The Cyclones proved worth of their status by holding the Cornhuskers to less than their season average yardage in total offense and rushing.

Nebraska's top offense racked up 363 yards in rushing and ninety-seven in passing.

Although the Cornhusker defense held the Cyclones to 211 yards rushing, ISU topped Nebraska with 116 yards passing.

Nebraska opened the game big with a forty-one yard drive topped off by a nine yard touchdown run by Doug Wilkening leaving 5:42 in the first quarter.

The Cyclones roared back to knot the score on a thirteen-play drive which finally ran quarterback David Archer three yards into the end zone for the touchdown.

With 1:13 left in the second quarter, Nebraska quarterback Turner Gill put his arm in motion by tossing a forty-nine yard touchdown pass to splendiferous Todd Brown making the score 21-7.

In the third quarter, Nebraska's Mike Rozier twisted into the end zone from the 3-yard line. Rozier was taken out of the game with a sprained ankle, but second-string tailback Roger Craig proved he was worthy of filling Rozier's shoes when he pushed into the end zone from the 1 yard line with forty seconds left in the quarter.

Tom Vergith ran seven yards for a Cornhusker touchdown leaving 4:49 on the clock in the fourth quarter. The Cornhuskers weren't finished though, as third-string tailback Jeff Smith rolled in for another touchdown.

Down 48-7, the Cyclones saw their one bright spot of the day. Senior Alex Giffords booted a thirty-two yard field goal through the uprights, breaking the Big Eight field goal career record.

Giffords said, "If I could I'd trade every field goal for an Iowa State victory."

In addition to Giffords' success, tailback Harold Brown led rushing figures with 113 yards in sixteen carries. Nebraska's Mi Rozier carried nineteen times for 109 yards.

Following the game, Duncan said, "I looked out there and I saw great team speed, great ability and great passing when Nebraska wanted to pass. You name it, they have it. They are the number one team in the nation."

Losing Streak Haunts Cyclones for Third Year

Oklahoma State

The Iowa State Cyclones ended their 1982 football campaign with perhaps their most bitter defeat of the year. The Cyclones succumbed to defeat in a 49-14 loss at the hands of NCAA rushing leader Ernest Anderson and the Oklahoma State Cowboys. The loss knocked Donnie Duncan's overall November win-loss record to 2-12.

The only good thing to come out of the game was two field goals by Iowa State's Alex Giffords to give him a total of forty-three during his Iowa State career. This mark beat the previous Big Eight record by three field goals.

The Cowboys scored seven touchdowns against the Cyclone defense and had well over 400 yards in total offense. No touchdown was scored by the same Oklahoma State player, enabling seven Cowboys to waltz into the endzone and tally six points apiece. The Cowboys scored at least one touchdown in every quarter, including three in the final quarter.

Oklahoma State got on the scoreboard first with Ernest Anderson carrying the ball twelve times out of a sixteen-play drive. Anderson scored from five yards out on his final carry of the drive. In the second quarter, quarterback Ike Jackson tossed the first of his two touchdown passes to tight end Barry Hanna to up the score to 14-0. A couple of plays later Kenny Zachary rambled sixty-one yards before being dragged down at the 2-yard line. Arthur Price scored on the next play to push the score to 21-0. The first half's scoring was completed on a forty-one yard field goal by Alex Giffords to make the halftime score 21-3.

The Cowboys' Kelly Cook scored on a one yard drive in the third quarter to open the second half scoring. Iowa State countered the score with Harold Brown plunging across the goal line from one yard out. That score made it 28-10, Cowboys. The Cowboys' next two touchdowns were set up by David Archer interception passes and made the score 49-10. Although it was not much of a consolation, Giffords booted a forty-six yard field goal on the last play of the game.

Even though this was the last game of the year there is a question yet unanswered. Why for the third consecutive year have the Cyclones been bitten by November frostbite?

District V Champs

The women's cross country team got off to a slow start but showed steady improvement throughout the season under fourth-year head coach Ron Renko.

Margaret Davis finished in first place three times, second place three times, and third place once, all of which were top finishing places for the Cyclones in the '82 season. This junior from Ontario, Wisconsin, took a very impressive third place at the TFA/USA Mid-American Collegiate meet, which led the team to a second place finish out of twenty-three teams. She also set a course record at the Missouri Invitational with a time of 17:51.

Freshman Suzanne Youngberg from Essex, Iowa consistently placed towards the top during the season also. She won many cross country honors in high school and the future looks just as promising.

Sophomore Catherine Hunter was a consistent pacer in the '81 season, but her knee injury kept her from all hopes of top competition in the '82 season.

The team's last meet of the season was the NCAA championship at which the Cyclones took an eighth place finish and Davis and Youngberg earned all-American honors. Davis led the team with a fifth place finish and Youngberg followed with a seventeenth place.

The team's overall performance produced a very good season with four first place finishes, including the District V championship, and three second place finishes.

Veerbeck, Kipsang Go To NCAA

The ISU's men's cross country team entered their season ranked fourth in the nation and despite the loss of their top runner Yobes Ondieki, they sent two runners to the NCAA Cross Country Championships and finished fourth in the NCAA District Five championships.

"Our season was real successful this year considering Ondieki was out because of leg surgery," Head Coach Bill Bergan said.

Joseph Kipsang finished sixth at the NCAA Championship, held November 22 in Bloomington, Indiana. Bergan said that Kipsang was one of the most improved runners on the team.

"Kipsang and Ondieki are probably the top two runners in the nation right now.

The Iowa State Cyclones competed in what many coaches consider the toughest conference in the nation.

Kipsang had a difficult time making the varsity team last year, but he's improved tremendously," Bergan said.

With his sixth place time of 30:22, Kipsang earned All-American status. Kipsang also finished second in the Big Eight Championships, third in the NCAA District Five meet and first at the Kansas Jayhawk Invitational.

Three-time letter winner Bob Veerbeck also ran in the NCAA Championships and finished thirty-seventh. Veerbeck's season record included a first place finish in the Iowa State Open Cross Country meet on September 18, a fourth place finish at the Big Eight Championships and seventh place in the NCAA District Five meet.

Bergan also said that freshman Raf

Wyns and sophomore T. K. Wignall competed well during the season and will be very important to the team in upcoming years. Wignall was one of ISU's top five runners and Wyns was the highest freshman finisher in the District Five meet.

Bergan also mentioned that Dean Piper and Bent Poulsen of Denmark will be top contenders in the future.

Finishing out his twelfth season at ISU, Bergan was very proud of his runners.

"We're competing in what many coaches feel is the toughest district in the nation," Bergan said. "We had a good season and a lot of talent to work with."

ISU Finishes Second in the Big Eight

Although the ISU volleyball team finished their season 15-16 overall, the Cyclones finished big at the Big Eight Championships in Columbia, Missouri. The team beat second-ranked Missouri in semi-finals competition, and advanced to the finals.

Six-time defending champion Nebraska, the number one ranked team in the Big Eight, beat the Cyclones in finals competition.

Head coach Mary Fischl said "the team improved in the last month of the season."

The team's season was highlighted by two big wins over Iowa early in the season.

Fischl said before the September 18 game, "Whenever we play Iowa, it's a good match. We have never beaten them in Iowa City and that is one of our goals." The Cyclones not only beat them at Iowa City, but they also beat them at home on September 29.

Fischl also said that a three game victory over Missouri really turned the team around. Fischl said it was their biggest victory.

ISU had four returning starters: Vicki Mealer, Donna Baumann, Sue Sawyer and Diane Doles.

Doles, center blocker for the team, had 375 kills with a .316 average for the season. She was also the leader in a number of blocks and block assists. Doles was named to the first All-Big Eight team at the close of the season. Senior Baumann was named to the second team.

"Diane Doles is an outstanding athlete," Fischl said. "She is one of the finest players in the Big Eight."

Fischl added, "A lot of our success was attached to the strong leadership qualities brought to the team through co-captains Donna Baumann and Viki Mealers."

Fischl said that the key to next year's success depends upon the replacement of two key players who will be lost this year. She said that upcoming sophomores Deb Zimmerman and Amy Montgomery will be players to be reckoned with next year.

"Both are excellent players. Amy Montgomery has got to be the most improved player this season," Fischl said.

Prior to this year's Big Eight second place finish, the best that the volleyball team had finished was third place in 1980.

Swimmers Focus on Big 8

Head coach Ramsey Van Horn described the first half of the Iowa State women's swim season as "a time of development."

He said, "All of the cards are in the deck this season. We have a very well balanced team. I think it's going to be a great season."

November 13, the team opened their season with an overwhelming victory at the Cyclone Relays in Ames. The Cyclones won six of ten events and had two relay teams in the top three places.

In their first dual meet, the Cyclones defeated Missouri, 108-41.

Following the Missouri meet, number one breast-stroker, sophomore Lisa Fraser was medically red-shirted.

With Fraser out, the Cyclones took fourth place at the Husker Invitational in Lincoln, Nebraska and lost to Iowa in a dual meet, 67-82 a week later.

"I really think we would have taken third at the Husker Invitational had Lisa been swimming," Van Horn said. "Iowa is very strong in breaststroke. I think we could have won that meet."

According to Van Horn, Fraser's replacement, Freshman Kristy Frieden, wasn't sure she was ready to be the number one breaststroker.

"She's come along really well and I have high hopes for her," Van Horn said.

According to Van Horn, the team has relied heavily on the ten new freshmen. Kathy Day, Lori Spirek, Frieden and Ann McRae were all developing well and becoming exciting contenders. Other improved swimmers included junior, co-captain Mary Coluccy, sophomore Karen Groh and sophomore Betsy Nowak.

According to Van Horn, a lot of ISU's backbone comes from seniors. Tanya Roach, Lynn Ellis and Donna Wasielewski.

Co-captain, Roach, held five ISU freestyle records and placed in the 1,650 and 500 freestyle events at the AIAW nationals last season. According to Van Horn, her time progression has been "phenomenal".

Diver Wasielewski was a national qualifier on the one and three meter boards. Ellis holds the top time positions in the 200-meter butterfly, the 200 individual medley and the 400 individual medley.

Van Horn predicted that the Cyclones, with a lot of hard work, could progress to the number two position in the Big Eight.

Swimmers Stroke to Success

The ISU men's swim team entered their season with a lot going for them. Halfway through the season they made those assets visible.

The Cyclones entered their season with six returning seniors and a lot of depth. Through the season, a 6-1 record proved that depth.

"We've had a good season so far," Head Coach Bob Groseth said. "Returning six seniors has given us terrific leadership and a well-balanced team has given us our season successes."

Groseth also pointed out that many of the meets had come down to the last relay. "So far, we've come out on top after this relay," Groseth said.

Seniors Mike and Jim Barron, two of four Barron brothers swimming at ISU, Ron Counsell, Bill Lubbert, Gary Peterson and George Sakellaris were returning seniors for the Cyclones.

Newcomer Scott McAdams was a surprise to Groseth. "Scott has done very well and made a big difference to the team," Groseth said.

In addition to the regular season, the team traveled to the University of Hawaii where they spent eighteen days training for the Rainbow Classic.

Eight competitions remain for the Cyclones, including a dual meet with cross-state rival Iowa. Groseth said that ISU can come close to beating the Hawkeyes and with a little hard work, a victory could be accomplished.

SPORTS CLUBS

Martial Arts

The active martial arts clubs that receive financial funding from the Government of the Student Body include Hapkido, Judo, Karate, and Tae-Kwon-Do. There may be other clubs that are centered around self-defense techniques, but only those partially funded by GSB are recognized by the university.

Hapkido is an art of self-defense that utilizes techniques from judo and karate. The attacks are applied in a circular form. Arm and wrist locks, along with throws and kicks, are the main techniques taught. The club does not compete, but they are active participants in various clinics in the Midwest.

The Japanese art of self-defense is known as judo. This art is a form of Japanese wrestling which promotes physical fitness. The Judo Club hosts tournaments and dual meets throughout the school year. They compete at least twice a month, and most of the time the meets are held in Des Moines.

Two of the more popular and larger clubs are Karate and Tae-Kwon-Do. These clubs compete with other colleges and use a more common form. They travel all over the Midwest also.

Hockey

The ISU Hockey Club looked forward to a successful 1982-1983 season with thirteen returning veterans and eleven rookies. The team had twenty-one Division I players and nine Division II players.

Coach Al Murdoch said, "ISU hockey team is looking forward to its biggest and best year ever. Season tickets are going at a record pace. Players are reaching new heights in performance."

The season began November 5 and 6 when the Hockey Club faced the University of Alabama at home.

Murdoch said, "Judging by the academic and talent level of the newcomers, we'll be able to make second and third units better than we've had before."

Rodeo

October 21 the ISU Rodeo Club hosted the ISU Cyclone Stampede. Eighteen schools competed in the event and the ISU club finished in the top third.

September 24-26, the club traveled to River Falls, Wisconsin, to finish fifth place at Falcon Frontiers Day, October 1-3, the club finished fourth in the Bison Stampede in Fargo, North Dakota, October 8-10, the club also finished fifth at the Gypsy Stampede in Aberdeen, South Dakota.

The club has approximately forty-five members. Members participate in mechanical bull contests and have also been involved in roping clinics.

Sailing

The ISU Sailing Club had a reorganizing year. The club was inactive in 1982 and decided to regroup during 1983.

The club began their new year with films and discussions about sailing.

The films dealt with such subjects as the basic theory of sailing and Inland Scout Racing.

The club hopes to begin competitive sailing next year.

ISU owns four sailboats, which the twenty-two members of the Sailing Club use. President Kelly Farrar said that most of the members already know how to sail.

A Time For Change

"There comes a time in every person's career to take stock and look ahead. If I am going to make a change and take up a new challenge, now is the appropriate time to do it." That was one of Lou McCullough's reasons for leaving Iowa State University and his job as director of athletics and assistant professor of physical education. So that his motives would be fully understood in his letter of resignation, McCullough stated, "I have had several opportunities to change in recent years and I now want to explore these various alternatives with real seriousness."

Although his letter of resignation was a surprise to ISU, much credit goes to this man for the job he has done. Not only has he given eleven years of service to the university, but he has also had a hand in many important developments. One of the most impressive developments under his administration was the construction of No Name Stadium. Many other athletic facilities have been established during the last eleven years. These include the new track facilities, a softball complex, a half dozen new outdoor tennis courts, and a new athletic administration building. National gymnastics and wrestling meets have also been held in the Hilton Coliseum, which was dedicated during McCullough's tenure.

One of the major additions that affect every ISU fan, coach, and varsity player is the rescheduling of Iowa-Iowa State competition for the first time in almost forty years.

Lou McCullough will always be remembered for the progress made under his administration. President Parks' statement accepting his letter of resignation sums it up the best. "He has been instrumental in accomplishing a very impressive upgrading of our athletic facilities . . . and in improvements in many facets of our total athletic program."

"There aren't many schools that keep the perspective of athletics in a proper balance. I still want the students to feel that they learned from athletics. In addition, I want to create an environment for athletes to reach their full potential."

— Max Urick

"Max will be a tremendous athletic director in every area. He has been trained here, he knows Iowa State's philosophies, and he is already here. It would have been a mistake to even consider looking elsewhere when the very best man for our situation is right here."

Fulfillment of a Dream

"This is the fulfillment of a dream," Max Urick told reporters after he learned the news of his appointment by the State Board of Regents as ISU's new Athletic Director beginning June, 1983.

Urick, who has worked with the ISU athletic department since 1974, will be replacing Lou McCullough. McCullough announced his resignation in August, 1982. Urick's position as associate athletic director gave him a lot of the experience he needed to move up to the position of athletic director.

Urick's duties as associate athletic director included direct responsibility for ISU's football program and all ticket operations. Urick was also responsible for scheduling ISU's winter sports program. For the 1979 NCAA Wrestling Tournament, Urick served as ISU tournament director.

In addition to his work with ISU athletics, Urick has had a lot of personal experience in sports.

In high school, Urick lettered in football, basketball and baseball.

Urick received his BS degree from Ohio Wesleyan University and received his master's degree at Ohio State University. He played football for four years and received the outstanding lineman trophy in the conference for two years. He was a conference wrestling champion for three years and made second team, All-American.

Urick also has an extensive background in coaching. He was the defensive backfield coach at Ohio State University from 1963-67. From '67 to '71, Urick was head football coach at Wabash College in Crawfordsville, Indiana. From 1971 until he came to ISU, Urick was assistant football coach at Duke University.

Urick said that he has received a very strong personal feeling from participating in many different sports.

"I live my life through sports," Urick said. Urick said that he plans to continue the philosophies that Lou McCullough followed. He said that he will continue the "three cornerstones" of ISU's athletic department. These three goals are having a program of competition, a program of high integrity and one that will continue to enhance the students.

"There aren't many schools that keep the perspective of athletes in a proper balance," Urick said. "I still want the students to feel that they learned from athletics. In addition, I want to create an environment for athletes to reach their full potential."

Urick said he feels very lucky to be entering a program where there is so little turmoil.

He said that one issue that may come up in the future is the building of a new indoor training facility. Urick said that he would like to see a facility built that would be open to students and athletes.

"We should build one that would make this country's eyes pop out," Urick said. "How many times will ISU build an indoor training facility? Only once!"

Jordan L. Larson was the chairman of a search committee appointed by the ISU Athletic Council to find a new athletic director.

Larson said that the committee outlined four qualifications that they looked for when hiring a new director. They were: experience in athletic administration at a school participating in Division I football, demonstrated ability in public relations, personal character of high moral and ethical standards and a commitment to pursue excellence in all sports.

"We are fortunate to find in Max Urick a man who so completely meets those four important qualifications," Larson said. "For the past eight years, we have been able to observe Mr. Urick's performance at close range and he has admirably met the requirements for this important position. Our committee recommends Mr. Urick with every confidence that the Cyclone athletic program will be in excellent hands under his leadership."

ISU President Dr. Robert Parks was also very pleased with Urick's appointment. He told the Board of Regents that Urick was "highly qualified, personable, and likeable."

She's the One That They Want

The sweet provocative voice of Olivia Newton-John electrified Hilton Coliseum on September 25, 1982. Olivia's undisputedly magnificent voice, along with her diverse song repertoire, left more than 11,000 fans crying for more.

The two-hour show opened with a biographical slide presentation accompanied by saxophonist Tom Scott and his orchestra playing an instrumental medley of Olivia's hit songs.

Immediately after the last slide the screen went up and the stage lights brightened to reveal a dynamic Olivia Newton-John in a black sequined minidress singing "Deeper than the Night."

Olivia further demonstrated her superb vocal skill with Dolly Parton's "Jolene." She repeatedly climbed octaves without even a slight deviation from perfect sound and tone quality.

Next she turned attention to her movie career and sang the theme song from Xanadu. After finishing "Xanadu" Olivia mysteriously vanished in a haze of pink smoke, only to return dressed in a red miniskirt. Olivia sang "Magic," "Suddenly," and "With a Little More Love" before making another costume change.

This time Olivia returned clad in the familiar skin-tight black pants she wore in Grease. The next set of songs were from the movie Grease.

In "You're the One that I Want" Dennis Steffano accompanied Olivia as they recreated a scene from Grease, which starred Olivia and John Travolta.

From there Olivia broke into some of her later pop-rock songs. She also sang her newest release "Heart Attack."

After a final clothing change into jogging shorts and an ISU T-shirt, Olivia got physical with the audience, singing "Let's Get Physical." Even after two hours of singing, she still had the energy to jump rope, stretch and do jumping jacks for the crowd. She ended the performance on a strong, but rather soft note with "I Honestly Love You."

THE PRICE OF A TICKET

Cloudy skies and fog hovered over an early morning in September as many students (with gleams of the perfect seat in their eyes) gathered outside Hilton Coliseum to purchase tickets to the Chicago concert on October 9, 1982.

The more adventuresome fans tried nothing of camping out for tickets, especially when the alternatives are taking potluck with the tickets left after the final day's sale and paying the exorbitant price of ticket-scalpers.

Lines began to form as soon as the concert date was announced. Students came prepared with their tents and camp. Some students camped out for more than four days, while others joined the crowd the day before tickets went on sale.

Most students slept in their cars to keep warm. They took turns going to classes and getting food. According to the new Hilton security policy, students are given numbered tickets which represent the order in which they stand in line. Throughout the day and night, Hilton staff members come out and validate tickets. Sometimes it's done after midnight and if the ticket holders aren't there they are scratched from the list and lose their place in line.

Hilton began this procedure during the spring of 1980, after the coliseum received between $800 to $3,000 worth of damage due to broken windows and other forms of vandalism. When a big concert comes to town, the Hilton staff tries to prevent damage by requiring students to observe the rules that are posted in the parking lot. The rules explain the ticket procedure, clean-up policies and fire codes.

Students are allowed to set up camp in the parking lot south of the building. The Hilton staff brings in portable toilets so the campers won't have to use the Schenck Building or Hilton. The security staff reserves the right to kick out anyone who doesn't abide by the rules.

This new system has proven to be very successful in reducing vandalism and making the process of ticket distribution run smoothly.

Although students may not totally agree with the validation procedure, the choice seats they receive make up for some of the hassle. After the first couple days of ticket sales, Hilton has only balcony seats left for many concerts.

The last option available to concertgoers is the ticket scalper. In dealing with scalpers, however, the quality seats don't always come with a quality price. But if they stand a few yards from their favorite band, the farthest things from their minds are the cold, damp nights spent camping outside Hilton.

Saturday in the Coliseum

What began as a foggy and damp morning of ticket distribution for those fans who camped out for choice seats turned into a mellow night of easy listening music. Chicago of old and new brought its disciplined jazzy rock sound to Hilton Coliseum on October 9, 1982, to a crowd of about 9,500.

The eight member band delivered a long set of tunes from its eighteen-year, fifteen-album career. Aside from giving the name of the album a song was from, the group didn't interact much with the audience, but avid fans knew that Chicago's music speaks for itself. The show began with the song "Only the Beginning" and proceeded with a crowd pleaser "Just You and Me," an older tune with a timeless sentiment — "Just you and me, simple and free... Come hold me closer, never release me."

Chicago also sang old favorites such as "Colour My World," "25 or 6 to 4" and "Saturday in the Park." More recent smash singles included "If You Leave Me Now," "Feelin' Stronger Every Day," "Baby What a Big Surprise" and "Song for You."

"Hard to Say I'm Sorry," a current number one hit single for the band, was a beautiful blending of vocal and instrumental emotion and lyrics.

The audience stood and clapped repeatedly in response to the group's final song and didn't sit down until the lights were turned on after three encores. The enthusiastic crowd just couldn't get enough. The band ended appropriately with "Alive Again." The legendary Chicago was definitely alive again at Hilton Coliseum.

Gallagher — A SMASH

"It smashes, it bashes, and it's a little hard to make french fries with. It fits any decor and removes fingerprints from walls or walls from fingerprints." With that rousing sales pitch, Gallagher, the comedian known for beating up fresh produce, introduced the Sledge-O-Matic. This oversized mallet reduces apples and watermelons to juice and pulp and is guaranteed to drench the first few rows of any audience.

Luckily for the people in the first few rows of C. Y. Stephens Auditorium, Gallagher's famous Sledge-O-Matic routine was saved for last. Gallagher appeared on October 15 to a small audience. The small size allowed the show to be more intimate, so he asked what color of underwear people had on.

Gallagher loves to point out inconsistencies in language and analyzes everyday life. For example, why is a finished structure called a building and not a built? Or if a bull is a boy and a cow is a girl, how can there be cowboys? Why do teachers send students to the principal for acting smart? and then there's the difference between the sexes: women can't pass a shoe store without stopping.

Gallagher had more to offer than just funny criticism. He had thought up some "totally new concepts" to help us out. How about a pole with paddles on both ends so you can play ping pong by yourself? Maybe a football with a handle to prevent fumbles? And of course, baseball catchers should be midgets so they won't need to squat.

The promise of free tickets didn't fill the auditorium for the performance. He wondered aloud whether everyone was out drinking twenty-five cent beer. Those who put off drinking for the night were treated to a terrific show.

EVITA

Eva Peron. The most powerful woman Argentina has ever known. Was she a benefactress to her people, a power-hungry politician, or a country girl who wanted a glamorous life? The audience at the musical biography Evita was left to decide for itself.

Evita was performed at C. Y. Stephens Auditorium on September 28-30. Told from differing points of view, the life of Eva Peron, from peasant to president's wife, unfolded on stage. The play offered a unique, abstract style in which hardly a word was spoken. The entire dialogue consisted of strong vocals from every member of the cast.

The musical opens in a movie theater. The death of Eva Peron is announced, and the patrons are grief-stricken. Eva was well-loved by the descamisados (the shirtless ones), who were the poor of Argentina. Che (Tim Bowman) steps in to ask if she really deserved their love. Che appears throughout the play to tell the other side of Eva's rise to power.

The movie theater becomes a small town cantina. Eva (Patricia Hemenway) sings of her ambition to head for the big city, and against the warnings of her family, she sets off for Buenos Aires.

Eva quickly learns that the way to the top depends on whose mistress you are. To illustrate her rise to power, a revolving door is used. It shows Eva's quick turnover of men as each turn of the door brings a better dressed companion. She finally finds Juan Peron (John Leslie Wolfe), a promising army officer. This and other interesting uses of stage symbolism were a vital part of the show's development.

Peron's struggle for power is shown as a game of musical chairs. He sits in the last chair, the presidency of Argentina, as the music ends.

Eva has become the most powerful woman in Argentina. Her beauty and charisma strengthen Peron's rule, but she is never accepted by the Buenos Aires elite due to her country background.

Eva isn't allowed to join the aristocrats' fund for the poor, so she sets up her own. Eva gains a following through her relief efforts. Che is quick to point out that her Swiss bank account is filled at the expense of the poor fund.

Under Peron, Argentina loses its economic prosperity. Che tells of rising inflation and unemployment, but the poor still love Eva. The love affair cannot last forever, though, as Eva finds she is dying of cancer.

In a touching final broadcast she bids farewell to her followers. The once strong and energetic voice sounds defeated.

This dramatic scene made the audience wonder if perhaps Che's criticism of Eva wasn't a bit harsh.

In 1952 at the age of thirty three, Eva Peron dies.

Was Che right? Or were the descamisados? Evita, a well-acted, thought-provoking performance, told the story, but the audience was left to decide.

Dave Schuster

Art In The Park

A traditional outlet for artistic expression in Ames is the yearly festival. Art in the Park.

Originally held in Band Shell Park in east Ames, the festival found itself too large for the park and was thus moved to Scheman courtyard.

In the beginning the display of arts and crafts had only twenty-five participants. Twelve years later the number of participants was more than six times that amount.

Over 150 participants from as far away as Devian, Illinois, to as close as residents of Ames gathered early the morning of Saturday, September 18, to set up shop.

The booths and tables lined the courtyard as early as seven AM as participants prepared for the coming crowd expected at ten.

But the crowd began to gather long before ten as they watched artists set up.

Pottery, photography, woodworking, painting and a variety of other handmade items were on sale or display, depending on whether you were an onlooker or buyer.

Many people took this festival as an ideal time to get a head start on their Christmas shopping and others shopped for upcoming birthday gifts or just a little something for themselves.

Rosemary Alsbury and her husband Robert make pottery and they had their wares on sale in the Art in the Park festival for the second year in a row.

Rosemary said she was thankful for the pleasant weather, something last year's festival wasn't blessed with.

Vivian Olson said that she and her daughter Ruth, a 1975 graduate in Art/Craft Design, construct and design all their own pillows and she said they are proud of the fact that no two pillows are the same. Their theme, Vivian said, was "accent on originality".

That seemed to be evident in every display, craft and demonstration. Participants were willing and eager to discuss their artwork and themselves. It indeed was another day of original Art in the Park.

They're A Little

Juice on the Loose

The crowd was small but expectant as they waited for the Juice Newton concert to begin. They got what they were waiting for — an excellent concert.

After an introduction by KCCQ disc jockeys (KCCQ and KASI) helped sponsor the event), Bob Dubac entertained the audience with stories, jokes, and magic tricks. Among other things, he demonstrated some unusual uses for a paper record jacket.

Although Juice didn't physically dominate the stage, her voice was a show-stopper. It was especially evident during songs like "Angel in the Morning," "Falling in Love," "Break It to Me Gently," and "The Sweetest Thing I've Ever Known." The band was obviously having a good time and there was a lot of interaction among them, and Juice, as she danced around stage.

stood at the microphone holding a guitar made of mirrored glass. The personable way she talked to the audience made all feel right at home. At one point she asked "Is my tie on straight?" and explained that it felt like "a Parelli tire — P70, to be exact."

Afterwards, the crowd rose to its feet and applauded until she came back out to play three more songs. The audience joined in on the last song, "It's Late," which was just for fun. Leaving C. Y. Stephens, one couldn't help but think: What a voice! What a concert!

Kenny Returns

Cowboy boots, hats and snapped yoked western shirts filled Hilton Coliseum October 26 as country fans converged to hear the music of Kenny Rogers and his band.

Warming up the audience to the country feeling was Lonnie Shorr. Like a shotgun, Shorr rattled off his jokes in his heavy country accent while the Gatlin Brothers prepared to take the stage.

"Broken Lady" and "All the Gold in California," strong hits for the Gatlins on the record charts, went over just as well with the Hilton crowd.

And then — out came Kenny.

An explosion of lights and lasers set the scene as Kenny sauntered onto the stage singing "You Turned the Night On." And that's just Kenny did for the audience as he sang hit after hit in his smooth style that has brought him to the top of the record charts.

Rogers chose Ames as the place to debut his latest song, "Scarlet Fever," sung only twice before. "Scarlet Fever" is a traditional Kenny Rogers love song sure to join his hit parade.

Halfway through the show, four giant screens unfurled and the audience eased back into their chairs to watch scenes of Kenny in his movie Six Pack, while Rogers entertained the crowd with their favorites — "Love Will Turn You Around" and "Coward of the County."

All evening long Rogers joked with audience members and tossed out tambourines and frisbees while singing his pop and country hits. The evening ended all too swiftly as Rogers closed the show with his traditional singalong "Lucille."

And once again the Hilton parking lot was a showcase of western wear as the country fans left the Coliseum a little bit richer than when they came.

Broadway Move Over

It's not often that a person gets the chance to sit around a table with friends, munch on popcorn, and watch his or her own play being performed. But that's exactly what happened in the Maintenance Shop this fall. For the second time, student authored one act plays taken from English/Speech 316 (play writing) were performed there.

Quite a few people were there, especially Friday and Saturday nights, to see Quit While You're Ahead written by Thomas O'Donnell, Souvenirs by Bix Hopewell and . . . And They Then Die by Kevin Dutcher. The first play showed how a young man (Bill Hanratty) was forced to re-examine his life while attempting suicide. As he thought about people from his life, they appeared on stage to haunt him.

Souvenirs dealt with the effect of a worldly old man (James A. McCasmond) on a souvenir salesman (Scott Hezner). The obnoxious salesman finally finds someone he can reach out to, and it changes him drastically.

The last play gave us a look at the death of a special woman (Kelli Hamlow) as only one of many in the career of a social worker (Barb Rossmels). It was at times very funny, but was also serious and moving.

Kevin Dutcher, the author of the third one act, said that "it was exciting" to see (continued on page 311) his play performed. Scott Smith, the performing arts director at the Memorial Union, considered the performances of the plays to be a success and hopes to continue doing it next year. When he came up with the idea last year, it was to "create more student input in the program" at the Union. Dr. Burton Drexler, one of the co-instructors of the playwriting class last spring, thought that "the productions were excellent." "It's a marvelous opportunity," he said, and noted that many students do a lot of rewriting and improving before their play is actually performed. The direction of the plays was done by students who either had taken or were currently taking the Speech department's directing class.

This year the three chosen plays will be videotaped and shown on the ISU cable station, channel 31. The one acts are a result of the combined efforts of the English and Speech departments, Student Union Board, ISU Theatre, and of the resources of talent here at Iowa State.

Parents' Weekend

A fall weekend with leaves falling, the sun shining, parents in cardinal and gold, students and football all come together for one of the best parents' weekend yet.

This year's Parents' Weekend, September 24-26, kicked off with the annual Milkmaid Contest in the Dairy Pavilion across from the TRA. Houses work together as they urge their "milkmaid" on with pep songs, enthusiasm and spirit. Mary Olson from Alpha Kappa Lambda/Volmer house took first in the overall competition.

Saturday's activities included a guided tour of campus, a legacy reception and a pregame barbecue at the Iowa State Center courtyard.

Saturday's main event was the Iowa State vs. Drake football game. The stadium was packed with cardinal and gold, including many parents and students, as the fans turned out in droves to cheer on the Cyclones to their 35-10 victory over the Drake Bulldogs.

During the pregame show the 1982 Parents of the Year were introduced. This year's recipients were Mr. and Mrs. Northey of Spirit Lake. Iowa Parents of the Year are chosen by the Parents' Weekend Committee from applications submitted by students nominating their parents.

Sigma Chi Derby Days Jumping for Charities

The trampoline marathon, Derby Darlings, Bar Night, skits and olympics all combine to form Sigma Chi's annual Derby Days.

Sigma Chi fraternities from across the nation, annually hold Derby Days, a fund raising service project, for Wallace Village. Wallace Village is a home and rehabilitation center for minimally brain damaged children located in Boulder, Colorado.

This year eleven out of sixteen sororities participated in Sigma Chi's efforts to raise $1500 for Wallace Village. From the participating sororities this year's Derby Darling was selected. The candidates are judged on their GPA, activities and personality. This year's Derby Darling was Laura Ambrose of Zeta Tau Alpha.

The highlight of Derby Days is the trampoline marathon. No matter what the time of day Sigma Chi fraternity house was a hubbub of activity. Aside from the trampoline jump, Sigma Chi also organized Bar Night at Grand Daddy's, skits and olympics.

Coordinating the twentieth annual Derby Days was Jeff Kirchner and Brian Finzen. Both considered Derby Days '82 to be a success, and were especially pleased with the support of the local businesses.

Women's Week 1982

October 2-9
Iowa State University

"Women Working," "Women in the Eighties," and "Celebration and Discovery" are all themes that have been addressed since the inception of Women's Week in 1974.

In 1974 Women's Week was formed to provide a forum for examining issues concerning women and their constantly changing roles and the impacts of these changes on society.

This year's theme, "Sexuality: Changing Perspectives," explored, through workshops, films and lecturers, the changing perspectives of women's sexuality. The program addressed the subject in many areas, including politics, history, culture and health information.

1982 program subjects ranged from "Staying Safe at ISU" to "Prince Charming meets Cinderella in the 20th Century."

The subjects covered by this year's speakers were just as diverse. Speaking on the impact of science and medicine on women's lives was Barbara Ehrenreich.

Also speaking was Evelyn Villines, the leading national spokesperson for the handicapped.

Villines, a polio victim, works for the rights of the handicapped and has spoken for the rights of the disabled in forty-five of the fifty states.

"Disability is only a part of a human being... We are human beings first, a disabled person second," Villines said.

Villines concluded her lecture by adding that all people needed to be treated with sensitivity. "We may talk funny, we may hear or not hear, see or not see, but we need to be loved."

Dr. Jean Kilbourne addressed the topic of "The Naked Truth: Advertising's Image of Women." Kilbourne is a writer and media analyst engaged in research on the effects of the media on women and men's attitudes toward themselves and each other.

Kilbourne began her lecture by saying, "I'm going to be asking of you tonight something that no one has asked of you before and that is to take advertising seriously."

According to Kilbourne, advertisements sell more than products. They sell values, images and concepts of love, sexuality, romance, and most important of all — normalcy.

Kilbourne focused on the unconscious, hidden meanings conveyed in advertisements, however, her primary concern was the exploitation of women in advertising.

Kilbourne said that according to a recent United Nations report, advertising is the worst offender in perpetuating the image of women as sex symbols, and as an inferior class of human beings. Kilbourne urged that people become aware of the negative and exploitive images that advertisers are conveying in their ads.

Women's Week is a student organization and the planning committee is made up primarily of students with faculty staff and community also involved. Women's Week is sponsored by Women's Programs in the Office of Student Life and the University Committee on Women. Funding is from GSB.

This year's theme presented an opportunity for both women and men to reexamine their attitudes and assumptions concerning female sexuality so we may increase our knowledge and understanding of women's roles in society.

Campus Chest: A Treasure full for charity

Mark Rawson

"Come Soar with Us" was the theme of Campus Chest Week '82, October 10-15.

Campus Chest Week originated in 1950 with a GSB resolution. To protect students from continuous solicitations from charities, GSB organized Campus Chest Week, which concentrated the fund raising efforts of charities into a single week.

Through its annual fund raising activities Campus Chest has been able to donate to Ames area charities, while uniting students, faculty and community members for a common cause. This year's goal was $10,000.

The basis of selection for those charities served is on their service to ISU students and charities in the local Ames area.

Fund raising activities this year included the annual blood drive. More than 600 pints of blood were collected and donated to Mary Greeley Hospital.

In cooperation with Campustown merchants a "Moonlight Madness" sale was held. Students swarmed Welch while scanning their favorite stores for bargains. Ten percent of the profits were donated to charity by the participating retailers.

The largest single money-maker for Campus Chest Week has continually been the celebrity auction. From 7 to 11 PM October 12 articles donated by famous people were auctioned off over KCCQ. This year's articles included Kenny Rogers' touring jacket, Phyllis Diller's frying pan and autographed pictures of numerous celebrities.

The athletes of ISU were also doing their part for the charities as they participated in marathons, swimathons and bikeathons with pledges donated for distances covered.

"Candygrams" and "aero-mail," paper airplanes with messages printed on them, were also part of the fund raising activities held.

And to continue a tradition, and highlight the week was the annual Bar Night at Grand Daddys. Arm wrestling, video games, pool and chugging contests were all part of the scheduled activities for Bar Night.

Led by general co-chairs Jamie Kaistner and Terry McAlister, the central committee and subcommittee members combined their creativity, talent and enthusiasm to make this year's Campus Chest Week a smashing success.

ISU ENGINEERS

Every year, for a week, the engineers of ISU shed their stereotypical images of Pointdexter, calculators, glasses and slide rules to celebrate. This year was no different. Once again the engineers gathered for the traditional design contest, Calculator Olympics and Rubiks Cube contest, as well as volleyball tournaments, pushball tournaments, FACs and Engineer Career Days in the Memorial Union.

Engineers Week, while providing an opportunity for engineering majors to unwind and enjoy their majors, also presents an opportunity for students to explore their career goals with visiting industrial firms.

The winner of this year's egg design contest, which consists of dropping an egg from the top of Marston Hall without breaking, was Dave Snelitzer.

David Gevill punched his way to the top in the Calculator Olympics, and Subodh Verma mastered the Rubiks Cube in the shortest amount of time.

Place Like Homecoming”

John McLaughlin

Homecoming 1913 was planned in two weeks, the plans for Homecoming '82 took five months, but then a lot has changed in seventy years. And Homecoming '82 invited the students and alumni to "Explore the Changes."

Changes have abounded since Professor S. W. Beyer inspired the first annual Homecoming.

ISU has seen the expansion of the Greek and Residence Halls as they have grown into the nation's strongest residence systems.

Also ISU has seen the addition and deletions of many traditions. The start of the pregame barbeque for instance. The Barbeque was once referred to as "Hamburgers for Homecoming" until WWII changed it to "Weiners for War." It has since been referred to as the "pre-game barbeque."

Also presented at the pregame barbeque was the announcement of Cy's Favorite Alum, Ray Engel of Marshalltown.

"Yell Like Hell", the traditional dance, and mass campaning are also traditions that have been synonymous with Homecoming for years.

Winning the traditional "Yell Like Hell" contest on Friday was the Phi Beta Phi and Phi Delta Theta skit.

In seventy years, however, many traditions have slipped away, among them the lawn displays and the Homecoming Queen. But, for every tradition lost one is gained. Last year began the tradition of the Torchathon.

The torchathon had Homecoming '82 running strong as 28 students, one faculty member and seven alumni participated in a relay marathon from Kansas State to Ames to kick off the game against the Kansas Wildcats.

Other festivities for the week included two performances at the Iowa State Center — "A Night in Old Vienna" at C. Y. Stephens Auditorium and ISU Theatre's "Equus" at Fisher Theater.

The Guest of Honor for many of the Homecoming activities was Mary Beard Gibson, chairperson of the first organized Homecoming in 1930.

Homecoming is sponsored by ISU Alumni Association and Homecoming Central Committee. Co-Chairs for this year's committee were Carol Danker and John Hagen.

Government

There are "no chances of my resigning," said Anthony Williams, former president of the Government of the Student Body (GSB), at the August 31, 1982, senate meeting.

A week and a half later, Williams announced his resignation during a student organizations banquet.

What brought about the resignation? First of all, the day it was announced that Williams and Hallie Still had become GSB president and vice-president in April, it was reported that Williams was on probation for writing more than $1,800 in bad checks to Ames businesses during the latter part of 1980. In July, American Express sued Williams for what the company claimed was more than $6,400 in unpaid bills. Also in July, the Iowa State Daily reported that Williams owed more than $600 to the Ames National Car Rental Service for an unpaid bill. On top of this, he is currently serving two years probation for second degree theft, a felony, which will end in April 1983.

At the August GSB meeting, Williams said, "There isn't very much I can do about my past but correct errors, be mindful of them and preserve the future so that the past doesn't repeat itself."

Later it was revealed that Williams was not yet enrolled as a student at ISU at that time, he had not paid his fees, and was overdue on paying rent for his apartment.

Impeachment proceedings were going to be carried out, but Williams resigned before they began.

Williams said his resignation represented "the dawn of a new day for me — a dawn in which I can sit back and reflect upon what I really believe in, what I have fought for and what I have tried to accomplish as president."

In his resignation speech, described as being "metaphor ridden" by Daily University Editor Dave Fenton, Williams said, "I'm moving from one band to another. The time has come for me to take off my uniform as a drum major for GSB. The time has come for me to realize that this band is not playing the tune of Anthony Williams. The solos are too long, the tubas too loud, and the parade watchers have left the sideline."

"And before my baton is taken, I'm moving to join a few new bands, one where my solo can be heard and the bass drum doesn't drown me out."

Hallie Still: "We're making an effort to represent the students."

When asked if they realized how much the Government of the Student Body (GSB) does for them, many ISU students replied, "What is GSB?" On Wednesday, April 21, 1982, a small turnout of 3,307 persons voted for representatives to the ISU student government.

GSB's main purpose is the distribution of funds. They receive $25 from each ISU student's tuition per year. With this budget of over one-half a million dollars, GSB allocates funds to student groups and activities such as theater, lectures and publications. Student services which include the Book Cellar, the Ames Tenant Landlord Service and the Campus Legal Service are also funded. Other programs being expanded are the Executive Council, a textbook policy and the Jack Trice committee.

One new program that GSB president

Hallie Still feels positive about is the Student Outreach program. The major role of this is to let students know what GSB is all about. "We want to get to the students before the action of a GSB senate meeting has taken place," says Still, sitting behind her cluttered desk of proposed agendas, messages and appointments.

GSB makes an effort to reach students in several ways. The GSB Connection, a radio program, is one way to attract students' attention. This deals with relevant topics of things that GSB has discussed.

Both Still and vice president Terry Rickers attend at least one resident hall senate meeting each week, and they also make an effort to attend individual house meetings.

Former Director of Information Mike Orso proposed that GSB print letters of constituency, which would be placed on cafeteria dining tables. These letters would explain what is going on with GSB and how students can contact their various representatives.

"Student apathy is a problem you always have to deal with," says Still. "We're making an effort to represent the students, but it's a two-way street. It's hard to do if they don't come to us. We appreciate any student input." The one thing Still urges students to do is "get involved. Be aware of issues that will affect you."

VOTERS

AT THE POLLS

The 1982 election proved to be a battle of issues that sparked the interest of students and voters in general across the state. Over one million voters went to the polls, the largest turnout of any off-presidential year in the history of Iowa. With Governor Robert Ray, in office fourteen years, choosing not to seek reelection, the stage was set for a true race for the vacated seat.

Roxanne Conlin, the Democratic candidate and former U.S. attorney for the southern district of Iowa, was pitted against Republican Lt. Governor Terry Branstad. The two candidates differed on a number of issues, including government funding for abortions, Iowa's penal system and taxation, but the major issue difference seemed to be their plans to stimulate Iowa's stumbling economy. Conlin's "Invest in Iowa" plan proposed borrowing $300 million through general obligation bonds to re-invest and create jobs. Branstad's plan was based on tax incentives for businesses in the state.

Branstad, receiving 53 per cent of the votes, was elected governor; Conlin received 47 per cent of the votes. Branstad won strong victories in all Ames precincts with primarily student populations, and also took most of the rural sectors of the state. Conlin received more votes than Branstad in the primaries, and, according to newspaper polls, was the favored candidate until a controversy arose when she disclosed that she and her husband had paid no state income taxes in 1981. Many felt Conlin's campaign did not recover from "the tax thing."

Two other candidates for governor were from Ames, Jim Bittner, former assistant professor of English at the University of Northern Iowa, ran on the Socialist Party ticket, and Marcia Farrington, business manager for an Ames private nursing service, represented the Libertarian Party. Both candidates offered alternative platforms to those offered by the Republicans and Democrats. Their primary goals for the 1982 election were not to win the election, but to make the voters more aware of their views and to try to receive at least two percent of the vote. By doing so they would achieve official ballot status in Iowa. Neither party met the required percentage.

Although Branstad was elected governor, a Democrat, Bob Anderson, was elected to the lieutenant governor position and Democrats captured majorities in the Iowa House of Representatives and Senate. One of the races that seemed to capture the attention of many Ames students was the race for the 37th District State Senate seat between Democrat Charles Bruner and Republican Marvin Walter. Bruner, elected to the Iowa House in 1978 and 1980, among major issues opposed draft registration during peacetime and favored government assistance for abortions, while Walter, president and founder of Carriage House Meats and several other Ames businesses, favored current draft registration laws and opposed federal funding of abortions. Bruner won all the Ames precincts except one on his way to an easy victory and a step from the Iowa House to the Senate.

In other state races, Democrat Ralph Rosenberg was reelected for District 7, State Representative over Republican Ray Kassel. Democrat Johnnie Hammond defeated Republican Paul Lunde for the 74th District House seat. The U.S. Congressional races were all won by incumbents. Top office positions in the state were split between Republican and Democrat incumbents maintaining the seats.

Voters across the state took an interest in the November elections, and students, who comprise over fifty percent of the Ames voting population, were no exception. Many students volunteered hours to write post cards, make posters, call voters, and register people to vote for the 1982 gubernatorial elections.

"It would have to be more than a full time job, there's no doubt about that," said Mary Carr, president of the ISU Democrats. Carr said she often worked over forty hours a week on the Democratic campaign, and didn't sleep for three days the week of the election.

Also on campus working for candidates were the College Republicans. "We're America's oldest and largest student political organization," said chairman Steve Churchill, adding that the College Republicans began planning for the November elections at the end of last year.

Both organizations set up booths approximately once a week in the Memorial Union, Carver or Beardshear, where students could register to vote and pick up literature on candidates.

Churchill said that there were more than seventy-five College Republican members who worked to elect the Republican gubernatorial candidate, Terry Branstad, as well as the other legislative and local candidates. Branstad, at thirty-five years old, defeated Democratic candidate Roxanne Conlin to become the youngest governor in the nation and in Iowa's history.

Although Iowa did not elect its first female governor, many Democrats were pleased with the success of the other Democratic candidates including Bob Anderson as lieutenant governor.

"I was really pleased," Carr said, commenting on the overall turnout. "I think the students were best at helping state legislative candidates and helping local candidates," she said.

Churchill was also pleased with the election results. He felt that often the party that is in the presidential position loses in off-election years. "Under the circumstances we did really well," he said. Although the Iowa House of Representatives and Senate are composed primarily of Democrats, stated Churchill, "When people look at Iowa, they're going to say it's a Republican state."

TE policy changes benefit students

The decision for ISU to change to plus-minus grading last year was a controversial one. The Government of the Student Body put the results of a student body opinion poll into a referendum for the University Academic Standards Committee, but this did not change the opinion of the committee. The proposal barely passed at the annual faculty meeting, and many students felt that their opinions were ignored.

Edwin Lewis, associate vice president for academic affairs, said that a better way for students to influence what happens at ISU is to talk to individual instructors, and explain why they feel the way they do.

The total undergraduate GPA (grade point average) decreased .07 between the 1980-81 year and the 1981-82 school year. Ordinarily the GPA doesn't vary more than .01 from one year to the next. Both plus-minus grading and the semester system, which were instituted at the same time, were blamed for the drop in GPA. Lewis, also the chairman for the Council on Instruction, said that because there is no A plus to balance the A minus, a small drop in GPA was predicted with the change to plus-minus grading. He also said, however, that it was agreed that the plus-minus system would be reviewed, and that the Council on Instruction has begun to do that already.

The temporary enrollment (TE) policy was also revised last year. It was an attempt to adapt the policy to the semester system and to make it consistent throughout the university, according to Lewis. But after the first fall semester under the new policy, there was an increase in the number of students on TE, so the faculty approved three policy changes for this year.

First of all, freshman and transfer students admitted in good academic standing will not be placed on TE before completing two semesters at ISU, unless they get less than a 1.00 GPA their first semester. This is a change from the old policy, where students were placed on TE if their cumulative GPA was below 1.67 after the first semester. Secondly, students placed or continued on TE at the end of the spring semester can go to summer school and combine the grades earned then to determine if they can continue at ISU. Finally, students who have earned or attempted fewer than sixty credits will be placed on TE if they do not earn at least a 1.00 in any single term.

Several of the students placed on TE or dismissed last year during this adjustment period were not pleased with the policy. Placed on TE last year as a freshman, Pam Gerwe considered it a warning. Other students said their TE status made them work harder the next semester. ISU is attempting to help students by making the new rules retroactive. Most students are happy with the changes in the TE policy. "I think the rules are working pretty well now," said Lewis, of academic affairs.

Anne Anderson

Below: A report card announcing temporary enrollment status or an "E" test paper are two unwanted, but possible, products for students attending ISU. They Deserve A Big Hand

Did you know that just about any hobby or interest you may have can be turned into helping others and getting verifiable job experience? The ISU Volunteers offers this opportunity to any ISU student. This group, which has its office in room 42 of the Memorial Union, acts as a contact with the Ames community and matches students with the kinds of experiences they're looking for.

They have several organized programs that range from working with teenagers who have run away from home to helping with occupational therapy at Mary Greeley to typing at the People Place in Ames. There's also an adopt-a-grandparent program, an income tax aid service and many others. Each of these programs meets separately, and together with the individuals doing their own types of things they form the ISU Volunteers.

Catherine Sweers, the coordinator, says that there are quite a few people from the College of Science and Humanities who participate in the program, as well as a good showing of design, business, physical education, and computer science majors. The Volunteers are funded by the Government of the Student Body and Campus Chest, and they also have money raising projects such as doughnut sales. They march in the VEISHEA parade, and in the spring they celebrate National Volunteer Week. During this week they join together to make people appreciate and be aware of all volunteers.

Catherine is very enthusiastic about the program because "it's here and it's available and there are no eligibility requirements."

"Dear _____,
On behalf of the College of _____, I want to congratulate you on being named to the Dean's List for the _____ semester. Maybe you've gotten one of these letters at some time during your college career. If you received one last year, you were one of the 3,316 students to make the Dean's List during the 1981-82 year.

More students were on the Dean's List per quarter during the 1980-81 school year than there were per semester last year. Judy VanDerKamp, who works in the Office of the Registrar, said the reason for this is still unclear.

Besides sending out letters, ISU also notifies home town papers that the student made the grade.

It's certainly nice to know that somebody notices if you've gotten a GPA of 3.50 or better while taking at least fifteen credits. Unfortunately, being on the Dean's List doesn't go on your permanent record. But at least you get a letter from the dean of your college, your name in the paper, and a good feeling inside.

The ISU honors program doesn't exactly jump out and club students over the head trying to recruit them. But it does indeed exist, made up of six separate college programs and a freshman program, it is available for any qualified student to take advantage of. The kind of students that look into and join the program are the ones who are willing to put forth extra effort to shape their own educations. According to Elizabeth Beck, the Coordinator of Special Programs, the goals of the honors program are to produce students who are strong in the basic disciplines, have a broad liberal education and have more than the required courses in their major.

To get involved in the honors program, a student has to have a grade-point of 3.35 or better, be at least a second semester freshman and still have at least seventy-two credits left before graduation. All the students in the program have to do some kind of a project before they graduate, not necessarily in their major area. They work individually with a professor on the project. This extends the students' interests and learning at ISU, according to Beck.

Some of the advantages of being an honor student are getting to take honors seminars and honors sections of classes, getting extended library loan privileges and getting priority scheduling. They use Osborn Cottage for seminars, studying and social events. An honors student can also get money for projects and go to national and regional conventions.

Being an honors student is a lot of work, but the people in the program feel it's worth putting forth their best efforts to get everything they can out of their college experience.

A House With Something Extra

Living in Fisher-Nickell house is having the best of both worlds. It is almost like living off-campus yet it has all the benefits of on-campus living, said the house's program assistant, Kurt Reslow. He said residents of Fisher-Nickell try to develop their personal growth and try to develop as a house as well.

Fisher-Nickell began as a dorm house which had goals for academic and cultural development. The program began to lose steam, and last year the Department of Residence told the members that they either "shape up their program," or their housing facility would be taken over by another organization and used more efficiently, said faculty advisor Roger Coulson.

Apparently, the house's program has shaped up because the house members are very close, said Reslow. "The first week of school everything was pretty quiet, but now people are going crazy," he laughed. The house sponsors a variety of activities, including canoeing, rollerskating and even a barbecue. Some of these are done with other dorm floors, but many are activities in which only house members participate.

Fisher-Nickell

Besides doing the usual activities that dorm houses do, Fisher-Nickell's advisory council (there are ten faculty members) provides the house with other activities not normally available to other residence floors.

One example is that Coulson was able to get a special lecturer to come to Fisher-Nickell and speak. The house also plans to attend free concerts and plays with their faculty advisors. They even think that they may have Sunday dinners spent at various advisors' houses, to get to know the advisors better.

At the beginning of the year, the house members met and tried to decide what their goals for the year were. They comprised a list of things that they wanted to accomplish and then the cabinet met and discussed them. The cabinet tries to program activities which will help to meet these goals, Reslow said.

One of the goals that was listed was to clean up after themselves. This is especially important because at Fisher-

Nickell there are no maids. The residents do their own cleaning, and yes, they do do toilets!

Eventually Fisher-Nickell hopes to get each of its forty-five residents from students who choose to live there. Now, many of the members requested to live in the house, but a few were just randomly assigned. The people who were assigned there are happy, Reslow said, but they didn't come with the idea of "What can I do for Fisher-Nickell?" in the beginning. People who requested to be there did, he said.

Fisher-Nickell house originally housed Home Economics majors for one quarter. The idea was a practicum, where students even took care of children. Coulson said. Later the building housed faculty, and then was converted into a dorm residence to promote culture.

Fisher-Nickell is truly a unique living experience at ISU, from the building itself to the residents and their goals inside.

We have all heard of them and they're part of ISU. That shows no signs of fading away whether we like it or not.

Friday Afternoon Club, or FAC as it is often called, is an ISU tradition which is carried out each Friday of the school year.

"FACs are a great way to end a long, hard week," says Maureen Ryan, an ISU student.

FACs are held at different locations all over Ames. Thumbs Up restaurant has early afternoon $2 pitchers on Fridays. Aunt Maude's restaurant has a happy hour from 4 to 6 PM daily, but on Fridays "There is a lot stronger crowd," said employee Carol Kleiths. Lucillan's is famous for its double bubble free pizza special which takes place from 4 to 7 PM. Ames' new bar, the Dallas Club, has free hors d'oeuvres from 4:30 to 6:30. The Maintenance Shop Bar, located in the Union, has $2.50 pitchers and 50 cent draws for its FAC from 2 to 5 PM. "Once in a while we'll have entertainment," says manager Dan Rice. Don Walters, manager of Cy's Roost, advertises his 3 to 6 PM happy hour in the Daily and on his electric window sign. "Our $2.25 pitcher and 50 cent draws are kind of a tradition," says Walters. Instead of opening up to the public, the Billboard has reserved parties in which "floors or fraternities rent out the room from 3 to 7 PM. The cost is $70 for kegs, a DJ and a bartender," says Kelly Anderson, manager of the Billboard. "I don't open up to the public on Friday afternoons because I'm booked with reservations all year long," he said.

"I like having an FAC on our own floor because when you come home from class, you don't have to go anywhere except right outside your door," explains Lisa Lovig, a Nuckolls house resident.

One ISU student, Fred Yandrastis, summed it up rather well: "Wherever they are held, FACs are a good way to prepare for the weekend."

From the Beta Sig Raiders to Veishea Central Committee there is an organization for almost everyone at ISU. The groups come in all shapes and sizes, from three people to well over 100. Organizations are formed to discuss similar interests and problems or just to have a good time. The organizations form strong bonds between people in the same major, or with similar hobbies or concerns.

Little North American offers incentive

This year's Homecoming activities included more than the football game and parties to welcome back alumni. It was also the occasion of the Little North American, the sixty-third annual showmanship, fitting, and judging contest held at ISU. This contest is sponsored by the Block and Bridle club, and is their biggest event of the year. Held at the State Street Pavilion and the judging pavilion by Kildee Hall, the contest consisted of expert and novice divisions in handling horses, beef, swine, and sheep.

The Little North American (formerly called the Little International) is planned and organized by a central committee, which is chosen in the spring. With the help of their faculty advisor Dr. Phil Spike, as well as superintendents and herdsman, the contest was ready to go by the fall.

Any ISU student can compete. According to Theresa Danner, the central committee chairperson, this event introduces new students to the Block and Bridle club and the animal science department. The people involved agree that it's a lot of fun. Linda Oliphant, a participant, noted that "you learn a lot from it."

The students draw for their animals two weeks before the contest. Then they each break and fit their animal. Because of this, the emphasis is on showmanship and not so much on the livestock used.

The Little North American lasted for two days, with the expert and championship finals held Saturday evening. Many of the participants enjoyed a barbecue before the finals and a barn dance afterwards. That night Kris Koch was chosen as the winner of the expert horse division. Janine Stewart won the expert swine division, Dan Wasson took the trophy for the expert beef division and the Supreme Showman was Jeff Holmes.

During the show, comic relief was provided by clowns, a calf judging contest, and other crowd pleasers. Several state queens representing a variety of livestock showed up for the occasion, as well as many friends, parents, and alumni. Having the contest Homecoming weekend provides an extra incentive for past Iowa Staters to come back. Considering the talent shown and the entertainment value of the contest, it certainly seems worth coming back to Ames to attend the Little North American.

Agricultural Club flourishes at ISU

The Agricultural Education Club is designed for students enrolled in the agricultural education curriculum. It includes many activities throughout the year. The purposes of these activities are to promote professionalism, leadership, and fellowship within the club and also with other organizations. Some of these activities include various picnics, a roller-skating party, a Big Buddy/Little Buddy pizza party, snow tubing, and several field trips, including one to the State Future Farmers of America Conference and the National Student Teachers Conference. The club also works with, and supplies services to vocational agriculture departments throughout the state.

The Agricultural Education Club is structured with an executive committee consisting of nine main officers and sixteen committee co-chairs. The co-chairpersons represent the eight major committees designated in the program of activities.

All Agricultural Education Club activities are climaxed in the spring of the year with the annual banquet. At the banquet, special awards and recognition are given to outstanding members and the newly elected officers are installed.

Committee plans Greek festival

Greek Week is an annual event designed to provide all ISU Greeks with memorable and enjoyable experiences. It is the goal of the Greek Week committee to maximize fun and enjoyment while minimizing the advent of any problems that might arise. Through strong leadership and hard work this goal has a long record of successful attainment.

Greek Week is also a contributor to the strength of the ISU Greek System. This is partly because during the week Greeks strive to establish common goals which promote houses to interact both within their own memberships and with other fraternities and sororities. The system is also strengthened due to a number of activities designed for community service and for the recognition of the many Greek system supporters.

Greek Week is a festival sponsored in the spring of each year. It develops leadership and provides working experiences for students involved in its planning and organization.

Stunts keep Homecoming alive

Homecoming is a long-lived tradition which offers something to everyone in the University community. Alumni, students, faculty, parents and the Ames public celebrate this exciting week together every fall. Behind all the festivities is a large group of students who have devoted much of their time to coordinate the many events. They're the true backbone of Homecoming. Each one is indispensable.

This group of approximately 90 students are members of six sub-committees. These committees include: displays, events, alumni relations, operations, host and hostess, and publicity. Together these committees present to Iowa State a spirited Homecoming which seems to get bigger and better each year. The hard work and enthusiasm of this committee makes it all possible.

Daily is well read

Many students read the Iowa State Daily every weekday, but few people know what it takes to put the paper together. The Daily is a half-million dollar corporation with a circulation of 16,000 and a readership of 30,000. It is not state or university funded. The bulk of the money necessary to produce 157 issues a year comes from advertising sales. In fact, the number of pages in every issue is usually determined by the number of ads sold. The Government of the Student Body (GSB) allocates money to the Daily to cover the subscription price of the paper for students.

Continuing Tradition

The forty-four voice Iowa State Singers represent the finest of Iowa State University's 400 students active in the choral music program. Carefully selected by audition, the Iowa State Singers perform the finest in concert choir literature of the past five centuries, and this year's repertoire includes the works of Schonberg, Bach, Britten, Sweelinck, and Thea Musgrave.

The extensive touring activities of the Singers included trips to Springfield, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh, Washington D.C., Philadelphia, Rochester, Toronto, Ann Arbor, and Chicago. This tour represents the group's most significant tour since a trip to England in 1979, and the most significant U.S. tour since the 1977 concert tour to the Southwest.

Serving students through programming

The purpose of the Student Union Board, SUB, is to provide additional outlets of programming to students, faculty and the university community. These programs include films — foreign, classic and new releases, speakers on cultural topics and current issues, as well as a variety of social and entertainment events from dance to jazz and blues concerts in the Maintenance Shop bar. In addition SUB sponsors the annual Union Festival, Wintergarden; Varieties, a showcase for student talent; and provides alternative

Winter

With the predictions that the winter of '83 was to be the worst of the century, students savored every warm day that rolled around. Christmas break came and went and students returned to campus only to find a trace of snow. The temperatures were well above average and so were the spirits at ISU as everyone realized that there may not be a winter of '83.

Christmas — a Celebration

Ross Roberts

Christmas today is celebrated with a multitude of traditions — some ancient, some comparatively recent and some transplanted from home. Whether the students hail from Chicago, Lebanon, Minneapolis, or right here in Ames, each individual finds a moment to put his or her books aside and prepare for the holidays.

Students living off-campus, in the dorms, and in sororities and fraternities find a common bond of Christmas spirit as they all participate in the season's festivities. Whether it be caroling, trimming a tree, or stringing up lights, wherever one looks there is Iowa State Christmas cheer.

The season officially begins with the traditional tree lighting ceremony on central campus. The tree lighting ceremony is one tradition that has remained for thirty-seven years despite the cold, the snow and budget cuts. The ceremony began with the caroling recital held by the ISU singers. The ISU Singers led the crowd in everyone's favorite carols, "The First Noel," "Joy to the World" and others.

A new tradition was begun with the introduction of President Parks by Student Body President Hallie Still Parks, wished the students a very merry Christmas and good luck in the new year as he stepped aside and brought the campus to life with the brilliant lights of the central campus Christmas tree.

The Farm House also contributed to the Christmas atmosphere. The Farm House, part of Curtis Hall, was decorated in the holiday style of the late 1800's. Bows, holly and garlands of evergreen draped the National Historic Landmark, transforming it into a storybook picture right out of Little Women. Built in 1866, the Farm House first served as a home for the supervisors of the model farm at the new college.

Students who missed the tree lighting ceremony and the Farm House could capture the yuletide glee during the noon hour at the Design Center. The ISU Singers once again raised their voices in jubilation to celebrate the season.

Each student, each in his own way, observed the Christmas with countless combinations of colorful customs and traditions. But for all who celebrate, in whatever fashion, Christmas remains an occasion to enjoy friends and family — and unwind from finals.

EQUUS

John McLaughlin

From the moment when the auditorium went completely black and then to the sight of the six actors putting on their horse masks while eerie whining sounds played, the play Equus was mesmerizing. The audience couldn't help but be drawn into the bizarre plot.

The action revolved around Martin Dysart (David P. Hirvela), a psychiatrist, as he tried to help Alan Strang (Kevin L. Dutcher), a mentally disturbed young man who had blinded six horses. In the course of curing Alan, Dr. Dysart encounters some questions about life and what we consider to be "normal." Hirvela and Dutcher's performances were supported by the other excellent actors. Some of them were Richard Runkel and Shelly Tharp as Mr. and Mrs. Strang, Marguerite B. Folger as Hester Salomon, a magistrate, and Anne Reinertson as Jill Mason, a stable hand. Kevin Dutcher said, "We really trusted each other on stage. You could see it throughout the whole show."

Behind the scenes, guest talent was contributed by David Olson, the set designer, Donald Larue, who designed the horse heads, and Michael Brindisi, the director. Brindisi was reportedly great to work under. Cate Sheller, the stage manager, called him "a very democratic director" who "respects and sometimes utilizes your ideas."

The last night Equus was performed in Fisher Theater, October 31, may not be the last time ISU Theatre performs the play. It is entered in the American College Theater Festival, which means that it could be chosen to perform in a regional competition. A national festival will be held in the spring of 1983 in Washington, D.C.

Equus seems to have been inspired by ancient Greek theater tradition, with its sparse but effective set and the way the actors remained present on the stage at all times to form a kind of chorus. Thanks to the efforts of Brindisi and the cast, it captured one of the best elements of Greek tragedy — the emphasis on man's humanity. Without this, the plot could have been merely brutal or shocking. As it was, the play was engrossing and thought-provoking.

VAUDEVILLE RELIVED

Sugar Babies opened with Eddie Bracken, the star veteran of stage and film, informing us he was "here to introduce you to a little burlesque show." And that's exactly what Sugar Babies was — a burlesque musical. It was full of tap dancing, chorus girls, singing and racy jokes.

The Broadway musical, a current hit with Mickey Rooney and Ann Miller, was an equally big hit in Ames with the touring company.

Dog acts, knife throwers, chorus girls in feathers, and vaudeville skits were just a few of the various facets of entertainment that made up the vast repertoire of acts in Sugar Babies and kept the crowd in stitches.

While very suggestive, Sugar Babies was simple and pure fun. The audience crooned with delight as Eddie Bracken, dressed as a transvestite, exclaimed that life was a drag, and looked ready to burst with pride during the finale as the cast saluted Americans with flag waving, tap dancing and the statue of liberty.

The humor ranged from complex skits to simple one-liners, such as: "What's the difference between mashed potatoes and pea soup? Anyone can mash potatoes."

Yes, Sugar Babies was everything it promised and more — vaudeville, nostalgia and chorus girls; in a word, burlesque.

Laura A. Maurer

The audience of the hit Broadway show Sugar Babies was taken on a trip through memory lane 23 veterans of stage and film grace C. Y. Stephens' auditorium: In the famous "Courtroom scene" Mimi Hill pleads for the mercy of the court with Judge Ed de Bracken.

CSN Bridges the Gap

With hard-hitting rock and roll, lyrical folk tunes and reflective ballads, David Crosby, Stephen Stills and Graham Nash demonstrated their varied talents to a Hilton Coliseum audience whose ages spanned decades.

Backed by six musicians, they opened their November 14, 1982, performance with electric "Turn Your Back on Love" from their new album, Daylight Again. After that, Nash seated himself at the piano for "Chicago," a song about the trial for the Chicago Seven, from the 1978 Crosby-Nash album. CSN, who have performed together off and on for twenty years, seemed comfortable moving from new hits to old ones and then back again, while also flowing easily from slow, acoustical numbers to pounding, livelier tunes.

Also in the first set was "Just A Song Before I Go," a song from 1977 that drew cheers of recognition and more fans to their feet. From the same album followed

"Dark Star," a punchy song which had Nash dancing perky steps, Crosby rocking his guitar like a baby and Stills turning consecutive circles with his guitar to the far right edges of the stage.

"Barrel of Pain," a bluesy anti-nuclear song, "Wind on the Water," a powerful song that utilized actual wind sounds, and a spirited "Love The One You're With" were also featured in the first set.

Following a break, the trio formed a semi-circle and launched a harmonious "See the Changes." "Thank you for being so quiet, that really makes all the difference," Crosby said when the song ended. The second set contained four new songs, as well as several CSN classics. The audience cheered and danced through "Wasted On the Way," and "Southern Cross," both of which are currently on the Top Forty charts. For "Delta," another song from the new album, Crosby performed alone on a darkened stage, lit by a single spotlight. Later, the other two members of the group returned to the stage to harmonize.

Stills' plucky guitar introduction brought the audience cheering to its feet for the familiar "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes." The song's exuberance seemed to unify the performers and their audience. Clapping, stomping and waving their arms, the audience joined the trio for the song's chorus. Apparently enjoying themselves when the song ended CSN hugged each other, and standing with their arms around each other's shoulders, accepted their applause.

For their encore, CSN returned to the stage to perform "Teach Your Children."

Above: David Crosby, Graham Nash and Stephen Stills performed for some 8,000 fans at Hilton Coliseum on November 14. The trio greeted an audience of varied backgrounds and ages, but their songs, both old and new, brought the crowd together for its group's three hour performance.

Although the trio's style and sound has changed through their twenty year career, the group is still creating hits and gathering followers, both young and old. Below: David Crosby, Stephen Stills and Graham Nash put out hit after hit each time bringing the crowd to its feet. An interesting feature of the concert was the crowd's quietness which allowed the rich sound of Crosby, Stills and Nash to be heard by all. Added at the end of this new song was a rendition of "Find the Cost of Freedom," demonstrating that CSN have not lost their original musical footing.

Comments were favorable as the audience filed out of the arena after the three-hour show.

"They always put on a good show!" enthused one CSN concert veteran. Behind him, two girls, probably of junior high school age giggled, "Isn't Graham Nash cute?" Apparently CSN bridged the gap between old hits and new, to put on a show that was enjoyable for the fans — both the old and the new ones.

Oak Ridge Boys Set Ames hearts on fire

"Dig a little deeper in the well boys, dig a little deeper in the well." That's exactly what the Oak Ridge Boys did as they brought their voices together in harmony and dug into their repertoire of hits for an evening of entertainment for all age groups.

People of all ages and diverse backgrounds gathered in Hilton Coliseum Oct. 21 for the Oak Ridge Boys return visit to Ames. A visit as welcome to Iowans as to the Oak Ridge Boys themselves.

"We enjoyed our trip here last year, loved it at the Iowa State Fair and are just as excited to return to the land of the Hawkeyes, state that is," said lead singer Duane Allen.

Screaming teenagers, foot stomping and cowboy yells were all part of the atmosphere as the Oak Ridge Boys churned out hit after hit in their unique style with their upbeat music.

Lead Duane Allen, tenor Joe Bonsall, baritone William Lee Golden and bass Richard Sturban orchestrated wonderfully as they sang everybody's favorites, "Sail Away," "Bobbie Sue," and "One in a Million."

While entertaining as a group, individually each member had his own contribution to the night's performance. Bass Richard Sturban captivated the audience with the romantic overtones in "Dream On," as he had the teenagers up on their feet screaming their devotion.

For a break in the evening the Oak Ridge Band took over the stage and impressed the audience with their vocal talent, as well as their instrumental performance.

Starting the evening out and preparing the fans for the country spirit was Rosanne Cash. Daughter of Johnny Cash and stepdaughter of June Carter Cash, Rosanne carried on the tradition of the Cash family with excellent vocals and lyrical composing talents.

The evening started out on the right note with Rosanne Cash and ended with the crowd's expectations fulfilled as the Oak Ridge Boys closed the set with their two most popular tunes, everyone's favorite, "Elvira" and "Bobbie Sue."

And once again the Oak Ridge Boys provided an evening of fun and music for country fans of all ages.

The Shop — A Showcase for Iowa Talent

Musical groups here in Iowa usually don't make the top 40's list, but that isn't to say that Iowa doesn't have talent.

Many bars in Ames cater to those searching for some hometown excitement. The Maintenance Shop is one such bar. The Shop gives Iowa entertainers a chance to show their stuff and concertgoers a little more of what they want to see.

Waters and Tyler and Friends, an Ames based group, claims to be a blues, jazz, rock and punk band. Waters and Tyler appeared at the Maintenance Shop December 3 before a standing room only audience. They played everything from Bob Dylan to their "own stuff," making an evening of enjoyment for all who attended.

The harmony of Waters and Tyler gave their followers more than they could ask for. For $2.50 tickets the group gave a "$2.75 show," according to Tyler.

On December 4 the Patrick Hazell Band came to the Maintenance Shop. They brought with them a lot of energy and fans for a foot stompin' evening. "If you like to dance, we'll try to find room," said Hazell. And they did. Almost everyone in the audience stood up and danced at one time or another.

The Patrick Hazell Band got their start about twelve years ago in Iowa City. After cutting four albums and playing warm up for some big names, they still have a rapport with their friends in Iowa. Showing their appreciation, they played a special song for their friends from Clinton. "The Bright Lights of the Big City." After twelve years together the Patrick Hazell Band definitely remembers where they got their start, and they appreciated every person in the audience.

The Warren County String Ticklers brought the Yucatan to the Maintenance Shop December 10. The four man band showed slides from their recent trip to the Yucatan and played their own style of bluegrass. In the version of "How Much Is That Doggie In the Window," the audience joined in on the act by barking during the refrain. The group also never fails to bring a new crop of jokes. Their jokes and periodic visits with the crowd makes them a welcome group whenever they come to town.

So the next time you're looking for some good entertainment, don't overlook what's right here in Ames, Iowa. You won't find the big names, but you will find talented performers and a fun time.

Ebenezer Scrooge (Tony Hammond) learned the true meaning of Christmas and changed the course of his life during A Christmas Carol. Produced by ISU Theatre, the play was performed in Fisher Theater November 19, 20, 21, and December 3, 4, and 5.

A Christmas Carol begins with a narrator reading the story by Charles Dickens. The voice fades into the background, reappearing at different times to relate the story.

Scrooge changes from a greedy, rich old man to a thoughtful and giving person by the end of the production. These changes take place through the magic of three spirits who appear during Scrooge's sleep: Christmas Past (Tony Vierling), Christmas Present (Jeff Clark) and Christmas Future (Dean Schmitt).

Christmas Past takes Scrooge back to his youth, where Scrooge is reminded of his only true love, Belle (Alicia Diane Thompson). Belle rejects Scrooge after he begins to turn into a workaholic whose only concern is to get ahead in life.

Christmas Present whisks Scrooge to the house of his employee, Bob Cratchit (Scott Hegenbart), where he is introduced to the Cratchit family. Scrooge sees how love makes Christmas a special time, even though the Cratchits are poor.

Christmas Future ends Scrooge's travel with a trip to his funeral in a few years. When Scrooge sees how people rejoice at his death, he realizes just how selfish he has become.

Scrooge awakens on Christmas Day just in time to begin to make amends for his past mistakes. He starts by purchasing a giant turkey for the Cratchit's Christmas dinner.

We learn that Scrooge becomes a loving, giving person who looks forward to Christmas and giving. Instead of the past Scrooge, who felt "Christmas is a humbug."

After the actors took their final bow, they filed into the audience to wish the spectators a merry Christmas through their Christmas caroling.

Nutcracker Ballet

Christmas! It's that time of year when dreams are to come true for young and old alike. And for at least 180 men, women, boys and girls from throughout Central Iowa, an entertainer's dream was realized — they performed on stage at C. Y. Stephens Auditorium in the second annual presentation of Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker" ballet.

The ballet, directed by Robert Thomas and Miyoko Kato, played to enthusiastic full houses for all three performances the weekend of December 11. The large cast of local talent began working on this labor of love the previous June, and their efforts showed in fine dancing, beautiful staging and delightful costumes.

The story opens to a greeting card setting of an early 19th century Christmas celebration at the Silberhaus home in Nuremberg, Germany. The daughter, Clara, receives a nutcracker soldier for a gift, a toy which eventually comes to life and takes her to Candyland.

Suddenly, everything becomes larger than life, with the candlelit Christmas tree growing to an enormous size before everyone's eyes. And from that point on, the evening becomes a whirl of dreams and fantasies, of giant mice and dancing tin soldiers.

On their way to Candyland, Clara and the Nutcracker Prince pass through a great snowstorm with dancing snowflakes whirling around them, and light, powdery "snow" falling gently about the stage.

The Snow Queen and her Prince welcome the two children to Candyland, where they are entertained by a series of colorful and exotic dancers, including twinkle-footed Chinese dancers, sinous Arabians, and Russians who amazed the audience with their acrobatic leaps and jumps across the stage.

Some of the finest dancing of the evening was seen in the Waltz of the Flowers, where precision and beauty were the obvious key words for these young ladies.

For some, the highlight of the evening was the appearance of two dancers from the Joffrey Ballet, Dominique Angel as the Sugar Plum Fairy, and Terry Emmanuel as her Cavalier. Indeed, those who came to see "real" ballet were treated to impressive lifts and leaps.

But it was obvious from audience reaction that the real stars of the evening were the "others" — the sons and daughters, brothers and sisters, moms and dads, and friends and neighbors who had spent so much time the past six months preparing for this Christmas celebration.

At a time when so many Ames residents could be overheard saying they just weren't in the Christmas spirit this year, those who attended the "Nutcracker" certainly felt differently after experiencing this ballet. For many, this was their Christmas dream come true. For others, it was only the beginning for many more dreams yet to come. And for all, this was a most delightful way to initiate the Christmas season.

To coin the words of a more famous Christmas personality, the "Nutcracker" was a Merry Christmas for all... and for all, a good night!

Doug D. Whittle

Below: A cast of over 180 volunteers and non-professional dancers from all over central Iowa joined together in spirit to present the second annual performance of the Nutcracker Ballet. Seventy members of the cast returned from last year's sell-out performance. To allow for a greater number of dancers to participate the artistic coordinator, Robert Thomas and his wife Miyoko Kato double-casted many of the roles. Kato and Thomas operate the Dancecenter and were former professional ballet performers themselves. Kato was with the Joffrey II and Thomas was with the Hackensack Ballet.

ISU Opens Season 9-1

The ISU wrestling team once again proved that they were a team to be reckoned with after finishing the first half of their season with a 9-1 record and a third place ranking in the nation.

The grapplers opened their season with a big 418 win at Drake on November 19. Following the Drake meet, twenty-five wrestlers competed in the Northern Open tournament at Madison, Wisconsin.

"The Northern Open is an extremely popular meet in that the open format gives a great number of wrestlers a chance to show what they can do," Head Coach Harold Nichols said.

Regardless of the wins, before the Midwest Open, Nichols was not satisfied with the team's progress.

"Our conditioning is all right, but we're making a lot of individual mistakes," Nichols said. "This will likely correct itself, but we're not wrestling like we're capable of doing."

The team bounced back with six championships and a comfortable win over Oklahoma and UNI at the Midwest Open.

Unfortunately, the celebrating of the MWC was shortlived as ISU fell victim to state rival Iowa, losing 21-15.

Individually, seniors Mike Mann and Nate Carr led the pack during the season. Mann had ten pins after the Iowa meet and an unbeaten record of 20-0. Carr, a two-time national champion, also had an unbeaten record of 20-0 and six falls.

The Cyclones, mid season were prepared for meets with Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and another matchup with the Iowa Hawkeyes.

Cyclones Drop in Series

Iowa State dropped to 12-16-2 in the ISU-Iowa wrestling series after a 21-15 loss January 15 at Hilton Coliseum.

Going into the meet, the Cyclones were ranked third in the nation with Iowa at the number two position.

ISU began the meet slowly. John Thorn wrestled a draw with Iowa's Tim Riley. Riley lost two points to stalling warnings which he thought were questionable.

Thorn said, "He just underhooked me and wasn't doing anything with it. I kept reaching for his legs. It was the referee's decision as to who was stalling."

The Cyclones, down 9-2, bounced

Senior, Randy Conrad opened the streak with a decision over freshman Bob Kauffman. Although Conrad won 5-1, he was unable to turn Kauffman for points.

"He's tough on the bottom," Conrad said. "He's got a good base and stayed low on his feet. He didn't wrestle, though. He didn't try anything. I'll take the win, but I wanted to make it bigger to get more team points."

At 150 pounds, Nate Carr came up with a major decision over Jim Heffernan. Carr controlled the entire match, including six takedowns and riding time. The final score was 15-5.

The big surprise of the evening was senior, Jim Lord's big decision win over Iowa's Rico Chiaparelli. Lord's record was 9-5 going into the meet and Chiaparelli held a 13-5 mark. Lord dominated the match with four takedowns. The final decision score was 10-6.

It was at 177 pounds that the meet turned in Iowa's favor. With the score 12-13, Iowa's seventh ranked Duane Goldman surprised everyone by deciding second ranked Perry Hummel, 8-4. The win by Goldman boosted the Iowa score to 16.

Senior Mike Mann, facing long-time rival Ed Banach at 190 pounds pulled the Cyclones within one point again when he decided Banach, 13-8.

As in many ISU-Iowa meets, the final outcome fell on the result of the heavyweight competition. Number one ranked Lou Banach proved to be too much for ISU's Wayne Cole and won a superior decision, giving Iowa a 21-15 victory.

Iowa State and Iowa will face off one more time during the season on February 19.

Midwest Wrestling Championships (Six Champions) at Northern Open (Three Champions, Men named Outstanding Wrestler)
 ISU Invitational (Eight Champions)

ISU Triumphs at M.W.C.

Harold Nichol's wrestling squad not only hosted the First Annual Midwest Wrestling Championships on December 29-30; they won the championship.

With a compounded score of 149, the Cyclones defeated Big Eight competitor Oklahoma and state rival University of Northern Iowa. Both teams finished the competition in second place with 121 points.

Fourteen teams battled a state and nationwide cold spell to attend the tourney. Because of the bad weather spectator attendance was hampered, however, it didn't seem to bother the grapplers' performances.

After the first day of quarterfinal action, ISU sat in the third place position behind Oklahoma and UNI. From the quarterfinal matches, the Cyclones sent six wrestlers to the finals competition.

John Thorn boosted his 131-1 record when he defeated Brigham Young's Brad Anderson, 42 at 118 pounds.

Kevin Darkus finished off UNI's 126-pound wrestler Randy Majors with a 5-3 decision. Darkus wrestled at 118 during the 1981-82 season, but seemed to have no problems at the higher weight.

At 142, senior Randy Conrad had no trouble beating state-wide rival Scott Morningstar of UNI, 13-5.

Twotime NCAA champion Nate Carr boosted the Cyclones into a comfortable lead beating Oklahoma's Roger Frizzell with a 7-3 decision. Both wrestlers had similar records going into the match. Carr boasted a 140 season record and a 103-15-1 overall record. Frizzell's records were 15-2 and 103-16.

Mike Mann, after deciding former ISU wrestler Charlie Gadsen, was named the outstanding wrestler of the tournament. Mann defeated Gadsen, Cyclone Wrestling Club member, 5-2 in the 190-pound bracket.

In less than three minutes, ISU's Wayne Cole finished the finals competition by pinning unattached ISU wrestler Darryl Peterson. The final pin gave Cole the most falls in the tourney. Cole boasted three pins in a total of four minutes and thirty-nine seconds.

Nichols, the tournament director, said that he hopes to make the Midwest Open an annual event. He said he would like to see the Midwest tourney replace the Midlands Open Tournament. He and other coaches had been dissatisfied with the way officials conducted the Midlands in the past.

"Many coaches asked us to run a holiday tournament," Nichols said. "We're starting this tournament to replace the Midlands. The Midlands aren't run as well as a tournament could be."

The women's gymnastic team ended on a good note in the 1982 season. They took second place in the AIAW Region Six and beat Iowa by nine points after a defeat earlier in the season against Iowa.

Freshman Kathy Edwards and Fran Binder were strong during the season. Kathy excelled in the floor exercises and the uneven bars while Fran did well in the balance beam competition. Debbie Diskerd tied the Iowa State record for the all-around category at the Southeast Missouri meet. 'Mimi' Starks pulled a strong score during the season for almost every vaulting routine.

Liz Nehls set Iowa State school records in vaulting, beam, and floor exercise while she was a freshman. As a sophomore and still under Head Coach Kramer's direction, Liz led the team in floor exercise. The team's best floor exercise score and one of Nehl's best scores was set at the Southeast Missouri meet which Iowa State won.

After finishing fourth at the 1982 NCAA Gymnastics Championships, Iowa State headed strongly into the 1983 season even with the loss of three squad members.

Head Coach Ed Gagnier led his team to a 55 record in the 1983 season. The '82 team placed second in the Big Eight Championships with a 276.50 score for the seventh time in school history. The best meet was a 278.05 score against Wisconsin.

This season the '83 team has already surpassed this score more than once. The team is composed of seven freshmen, one senior transfer, and thirty-two returning squad members. Leading the team in competition is Rick Atkinson, Mark Bowers, Brett Finch, Gary Griffin, Lon Lincell, Tim Lyons, and Kevin Kirks.

Some of these squad members returned this season with awards from the '82 season. Sophomores Rick Atkinson and Mark Bowers were co-winners of the 1982 Outstanding Freshman Award. Atkinson became the first Cyclone freshman to earn All-American honors from a 9.55 score in the NCAA floor exercise finals.

Junior Brett Finch led the team in the '82 season with a 56.05 score in the all-around category. This career high helped to retain his leading position in the '83 season.

Senior transfer Kevin Kirks has done well during the '83 season, particularly at the Rocky Mountain Open meet. Kirks broke a school record on the high bar with a score of 9.85.

The men that make up the ISU gymnastic squad are among the strongest pound for pound of varsity team members at Iowa State. They have placed in the top three in the NCAA eight times in the last eighteen years, which is more than any other varsity sport at ISU.

Five Enthusiastic Wins Start Season

After a dismal 10-17 record in the 1981-82 Iowa State men's basketball campaign, some fans might have been a little bit disheartened. Although the record wasn't the finest in the land, the Cyclones did win their last three conference games. Those three wins just might have been the catalyst for this year's team.

Assistant coach Gary Cook said, "Last year's team won their last three Big Eight conference games. Those games showed that this year the Cyclones could play to win and not to lose."

Coming into the season, Head Coach Johnny Orr had one of his finest recruiting seasons ever. Orr's recruits include: 6'4" Ted Burbach, Dubuque, Iowa; 7'1" Brad Dudek, Duluth, Minnesota; 6'8" David Moss, Franklin Park, Illinois; 6'4" Ron Virgil, Chicago, Illinois; 6'3" Jeff Harnacek, LaGrange, Illinois; 6'8" Sam Hill, Chicago, Illinois. a few setbacks occurred. Dudek broke his leg in the summer and it didn't heal properly. Orr had to redshirt him. Hill was ineligible because of his grades, but achieved a three-point grade point average in his first semester at Iowa State. Losing two players of that size definitely hurt the Cyclones' inside game where they lacked depth.

Returning for the Cyclones were junior guards Terrence Allen and Ron Harris and sophomore forward Barry Stevens. Harris started every game since he has been at ISU and averaged thirteen points per game last year. Stevens also averaged thirteen points per game last year as a freshman.

To open the season, the Cyclones took on a tough Division Two Nebraska-Omaha team. ISU was led to a 69-63 victory on a twenty-eight point scoring performance by Stevens.

The next step on the ladder was Minnesota. ISU surprised the mighty Golden Gophers with a 80-78 win in overtime. This time, Stevens chipped in thirty points. Orr had a good solid defensive performance by the rest of the team to overcome Minnesota's 7'3" center Randy Breuer.

Orr said, "The Minnesota game was just a super win. It proved we could play with anybody."

Iowa State then downed North East Missouri State, Drake and Arizona to catapult their record to an amazing 5-0 mark. It was party time in Ames until the Cyclones lost five of their next eight games. Their losses came against Texas Christian, Jacksonville, Penn State, Illinois, and Iowa. Their victories included Wisconsin-Oshkosh, Chicago State and Northern Iowa.

The Cyclones have an 85 record going into their Big Eight season. The Big Eight has improved immensely in basketball talent and there are a number of different teams that will battle for the top spot.

Orr said, "It's going to be tough road in the Big Eight, but I feel we will hold our own."

At the midway point in the 1982-83 women's basketball schedule the team found itself in an uphill climb. One of those bright spots was when the Cyclone women Cagers rattled nineteenth ranked Drake, 72-70.

Tonya Burns, the Cyclone's 6'1" center led the scoring attack averaging over seventeen points per game so far this season.

Coch DeB Oing said, "This team has gone through some rough times together." Apparently times will get worse before they get better.

attitude up and be healthy for the Big Eight tournament."

The team's wins have come against Oklahoma, Western Illinois, Drake and Oklahoma State.

Because of their tough schedule it seemed unlikely that the Cyclone women could better last year's 11-20 final record. The Cyclones play a number of Big Eight teams that they have been already beaten by, so every position on the team will have to play up to her potential. Not only starters, Burns, Jolene Leseman, Jane Lohenstein, Robin Sawyer and Cerita Cain, but every player on the team.

Burns has led the team in scoring and rebounding almost every game. She is a sophomore center from Leo, Indiana. She started twenty-eight out of thirty-one games for the Cyclones last year and set a freshman rebounding record. Last year's leading scorer, senior Jolene Leseman, averaged close to fourteen points per game this year. Annette Ackerson was nominated to be the 1982 female Athlete of the Year by the Big Eight Conference, and according to head swimming coach Ramsey Van Horn, "the award was well-deserved by Annette."

Annette was also the co-captain of the swim team during her junior and senior years at ISU.

"Annette was a major leader for the team," Van Horn said. "She is very perceptive as far as others are concerned and she had a good ability to communicate with her teammates and myself."

Annette said, "I wanted what was best for the team rather than myself and I think that is really important when an athlete is the co-captain of a team."

In addition to her work with the swim team, Annette worked with the Athletic Council during her senior year at ISU. Annette was chosen from all of the female athletes at ISU to represent women's athletics at the Council meetings.

"There are a lot of fantastic female athletes at ISU," Ackerson said. "It was a great honor to be picked to work on the Council."

Annette's work on the Council involved weekly meetings where she voted on issues on behalf of all the women athletes at ISU.

When the senior from Rock Island, Illinois, received the Athlete of the Year award in addition to her other honors, she said she was very surprised and honored.

"I think my getting the award had a lot to do with qualifying for Nationals and being on the Athletic Council," Annette said. "It was definitely the highest honor I have ever gotten."

Female Athlete of the Year

Male Athlete of the Year

For the 1981-1982 school year John Quinn received the Athlete of the Year award. The Dowling High graduate out of Des Moines won numerous awards throughout his five year span at Iowa State University.

Quinn's first year at Iowa State saw starting action in two football games. For the season he totaled 257 yards, one touchdown pass, and two touchdown runs. The high point of his freshman year was in the Peach Bowl of 1977 when he passed for ninety-four yards and one touchdown.

As a sophomore, Quinn was red-shirted in the 1978 season. Walter Grant and Terry Rubley were in the starting positions throughout the season. Even after spending a season on the sidelines he was often known as the "best technical passer that ISU has ever had."

Quinn did extremely well in the spring scrimmages, both his sophomore and junior years. He was declared the top offensive player by the media after the 1979 Cardinal and Gold game. He played well the majority of his junior year until the Iowa-Iowa State game where he suffered a serious knee injury. Quinn sat out the rest of the season.

In the 1980 season Quinn helped the team to a 5-0 start before suffering a partially torn rotator cuff in the sixth game. After his injury the team had five consecutive losses to bring out a 6-5 win loss record. Even with his hampered passing game, Quinn averaged 100 yards per game total offense.

As a fifth year senior, Quinn stayed healthy through a 5-1 team record. He made All-Big Eight quarterback by United Press International, first team Big Eight Offensive Player of the Week in the Missouri game. John Quinn also received the Reuben J. Miller award in 1981. This award is given to a football player for good conduct on and off the field. Quinn also held first place in total offense in the Big Eight in 1981 with 1,658 yards for the season.

Duncan Leaves ISU; Begins New Career

Thursday, January 13, Associate Athletic Director Max Grick announced the resignation of head football coach Donnie Duncan.

Duncan was unable to make the announcement personally because he was acting as assistant coach in the East-West Shrine Bowl Game in Palo-Alto, California.

According to Duncan, his decision to leave ISU had nothing to do with pressure from disenchanted fans. Duncan finished the 1982 season with a disappointing 4-6-1 and a four-year 18-24-2 career record with ISU.

"I have enjoyed coaching," Duncan said. "This decision is not the result of being burned out or disenchanted with coaching."

Regardless of the 1982 season losses, Duncan received strong endorsement from the ISU administration following the completion of the season.

Upon hearing of Duncan's resignation, ISU President Robert Parks said, "My evaluation of him [Duncan] has not changed. In my judgment, he is a man of great honesty, integrity and hard work."

Grick, who will head the search committee for a new head football coach also had words of praise for Duncan and his years at Iowa State.

"We salute Donnie for the effort, hard work, style and manner in which he represented Iowa State University."

Duncan's seemingly abrupt decision to leave ISU came about when he was offered the opportunity to work for a Texas real estate investment firm.

"This opportunity became available to me after the first of the year," Duncan said. "My decision has been thought through, not only for today, but for many years to come. I have elected to pursue this new career."

Forty-two year-old Duncan expressed concern at having to change careers at the age of fifty or fifty-five.

"This opportunity comes at a time that I can change course and still have good earning years ahead of me," Duncan said.

Duncan will be working with Austin College roommate Bo Miller in the real estate firm of Bolanz and Miller.

Duncan's timing did come at an inopportune time for the ISU football staff. His decision fell three weeks before high school seniors began signing national letters-of-intent.

Grick said Duncan's late decision won't have much impact on recruiting.

"The real strength of ISU does not rest with any one person," Grick said.

Duncan said, "There's really no good time for a coach to leave."

Following Duncan's decision, Grick and a selection committee were faced with the important responsibility of finding a new head coach. Grick was chosen to head the committee rather than current Athletic Director Lou McCullough.

"It was decided that I should be most directly involved because of the future impact of the decision," Grick said.

Grick said that he would not reveal any names of candidates until the final decision was made.

"I don't want to create any false impressions concerning anyone."

Grick said the committee will develop a list of candidates from recommendations made by other peers and inside sources.

"This is a very good job. Our coaches are well paid," Grick said.

Duncan said that he would have no direct influence in choosing the new coach. He did, however, tell Grick that he would be glad to discuss the job with potential candidates.

Duncan's players were on break when the announcement was made. Several players were called by Duncan and others heard the news through the media.

Yes

Hockey? Iowa State has a hockey team?

Although that may be a common response to the mention of the Cyclone Hockey Club, ISU's squad does exist, and has for fourteen years.

The main reason for this near anonymity is the fact that the program still operates on a non-varsity status. Head Coach Al Murdoch has been the team's coach on a voluntary basis for the past twelve years, and is looking forward to his 200th win at press time. Murdoch hopes that the team will see varsity status within two years.

"What we need for Iowa state to sanction hockey is support from students, alumni, and the community of Ames. I really feel that this is coming about," Murdoch said.

Pete Bowman, a marketing senior who was MVP and the captain of the 1981-82 season, feels that the varsity status would improve ISU's recruiting chances. "We (the team) used to have a lot of good players from Canada play here, because it's a good school. But now, the exchange rate is so poor that without scholarships, not many of us can afford to come down to school."

Three hundred dollars per semester is available to any starting player who maintains a 2.0 GPA with twelve credits. This money is donated by alumni, many of them past hockey players.

However, all of this doesn't discourage quality players from coming to ISU. According to Murdoch, "We have many of the finest players, the toughest in North America. We also draw the largest crowds for a 'club' sport in North America." He feels that the quality of the team is such that varsity status would not radically change it. "The status is what would count a lot to the players — the respect of students, a letterman's jacket, things like that. It [varsity status] would add depth, but we have a quality team now."

Right now, they're asking as much of us as they can. We would like to give more, but it's not possible as a club."

For Dan Jenkins, a junior defenseman from California, the club status did not figure in his decision to play here. "It's a very good school, and AI is an excellent coach."

Jeff Marshall, however, sees a big difference between varsity and non-varsity status. He attended Oswego College in New York before coming to ISU. Hockey was a varsity sport at Oswego, and Jeff said the student and administration's attitudes were different.

"We got a lot more respect, an awful lot more — like football and basketball here [ISU]," Marshall explained.

At press time, the Cyclones were 198-145-6 for the past twelve years. Past players have been asked to try out for the Olympic and professional hockey teams. They have beaten some of the best teams in Canada and North America, and all with a volunteer staff.

Relating: Pros and Cons

The names of students quoted in this article have been changed.

For many years, people have dated or married persons from a different race or nationality. But even in this day of more liberal attitudes, these mixed relationships aren't totally accepted by society.

"Society makes the rules," says Ray, a black student who is dating a white student. "If it weren't for society, people would be a lot happier."

Ray and Mary have been friends since seventh grade, but started dating two years ago.

"At first, it was hard for her dad to accept us going out," Ray recalls. "He would hang up on me whenever I called." At Mary's urgings though, her father finally accepted the relationship and apologized to Ray.

"Our friends were also shocked at first," says Ray. "When I took Mary to our high school Homecoming dance, it was uncomfortable because everyone was watching us."

"People think that if you've got blond hair, you've got to go out with someone with blond hair."

"If a remark is said about us, I feel uncomfortable at first. It's usually not what they say, but where they say it. If it's a big group, I feel that I have to take a stand. I'd like to just sit down and talk about it... I don't even know them and they're giving me turned off looks."

"I know it would be more acceptable to be dating someone of my own race, but I doubt if I'd be happier."

Three years ago, Paula, a white student, met Greg, a black student, at a party. A week after the party, they started going out.

"I haven't lost one friend and have gained friends outside of my own race and learned more about the world," says Paula. "My outlook on people has changed and I've learned to accept people as they are. I look at them as a person and not a race."

Everyone accepted Paula and Greg's relationship except her father.

"Everybody has something wrong where people pick on them," says Paula. "We have a relationship and we happen to be two different colors."

"If we ever have kids, we'll treat them the way we think they should be treated. We might have to be more close because they might get some flack."

Besides interracial relationships, relationships also abound between people of different national origins. Culture and language differences are sometimes a larger barrier for these couples than societal barriers are.

Jack, an American, was living in Peru when he met his wife Libby in October of 1981. They were married in February.

"I had to marry her in order to get her out of Peru," says Jack. "Her parents thought that the reason we got married so soon was because she was pregnant."

The biggest problem Jack and Libby had was getting married. "Weddings in Peru are on a gigantic scale," says Jack. "We just wanted a simple ceremony so it became a nuisance to get married down there."

Jack describes his father as being "more than a little surprised" from the news of his marriage.

"When I told him, I think he dropped the phone."

"We haven't had any negative reactions from anyone. Everyone has accepted our marriage."

Karen B. Fetter

Some students enjoy an occasional beer, and others prefer tumblers of hard liquor. Some imbibe alcohol rarely, while some students guzzle alcoholic beverages every day. No matter with what frequency, 89 percent of ISU's student body reported that they drank alcohol, according to a 1979 study.

Students gave many reasons for drinking — everything from "It's a great way to meet people" to "There's nothing else to do in Ames." Those students who chose to drink were able to do so inexpensively, as Ames bars competed for clientele with such bargains as mug nights, nickel draws, tufers, FACs and ladies' nights. Dormitory and greek system parties, which almost always included keg beer and/or other alcoholic beverages, were also plentiful. One eighteen-year-old woman admitted that from the moment she attended her first ISU party, "I felt a tremendous pressure to drink."

Alcohol is not without its problems, of course. Many students found that after a night of alcoholic indulgence a hangover, complete with fuzzy throat and pounding head, often was inevitable. In addition, Office of Student Life (OSL) data shows that over 50 percent of student behavioral incidences involved alcohol.

For students who became intoxicated and then caused problems on campus, the OSL offered an alcohol education class. The class began fall semester, 1982, and was open to any interested student. Many who attended, though, were there by referral. Steve McDonnell, ISU alcohol education staff coordinator, stressed that the class didn't preach the evils of alcohol, but instead promoted responsible decision making. McDonnell noted that although many of the class members were mandatory participants, and "not too thrilled with being there, my impression is that they felt it was worth their time."

In addition to the class, the OSL alcohol education staff spent a lot of time providing students with information. Four graduate students were employed half time to present programs to residence hall, greek houses and university organizations. Tom Isenhart, MacDonald house resident assistant, said that it was hard to get students to attend programs at first. "They think the OSL will tell them not to drink," he said. "After they went I didn't hear any negative comments. They were all glad they did," he observed.

Paul Gray

During the year committees were established to review the alcohol policies within the residence hall system, the greek system, and the university. McDonnell said the committee to review university policy, of which he is chairperson, wanted to look at ISU's alcohol policy, as stated in the handbook, to see if it was adequate, enforced, promoted the abuse of alcohol, or added to environmental problems.

Other changes occurred within the state. In July Iowa instigated a new drunk driving law. Under the tougher law, a driver who refuses to take an intoxication test or fails the test may have his or her license revoked on the spot. Fines and jail penalties were stiffened for those motorists convicted of Operating While Intoxicated (OWI) which replaced the classification Operating a Motor Vehicle While Under the Influence (OMVUI). The new law and the OSU alcohol education staff urged students to take a closer look at their drinking habits.

RESISTING REGISTRATION

"I joined the military because I love my country," the student proclaimed defensively.

"I think he has the right to go out and want to die for his country," another man said into the microphone, "but the problem is our country wants us all to go out and die for our country."

"Why are we backing the people who are breaking the law?" demanded a man in the audience.

"Because it's a bad law!" countered a nearby woman.

"This country was built on a war, what's wrong with that?" another person asked.

The discussion was getting heated; by now the allotted rally time was up, but the central campus crowd stayed, breaking into small groups to argue about registration for the draft. It was the day after Gary Eklund of Davenport became the first lowan to be indicted for refusing to register for the draft.

"I think that registering is giving over your rights, your obligation to decide if the particular war you're being drafted for is right or wrong," explained Jeff Hall, the only ISU student to publicly admit he will not register for the draft.

After seven years of nonregistration, the practice was reinstated in 1980 by the Carter administration. The registration card, available at post offices, requires a name, address, birthdate and social security number. The Selective Service contends that registration is simply filling out a form, and since there is no current draft, there is no chance that registrants will go off to war.

Protestors of the registration program say it is not that simple. They believe a draft could easily be reinstated. "People need to think about the draft when there's only registration, because the draft can be on us like that!" Marilyn Fenn, an Ames peace worker said, snapping her fingers. The current registration system also does not include a space for men to declare conscientious objector (CO) status, as in the past. According to the law, all men must register within thirty days of their eighteenth birthdays, or face a maximum punishment of five years in jail and/or a $10,000 fine.

According to Selective Service estimates, which some people think are low, there are 500,000 nonregistrants in the United States. As of January, 1983, thirteen men across the country had been indicted for failing to register. In addition to Eklund, another lowan, Russell "Rusty" Martin, University of Northern Iowa student body president, was indicted.

All of the men indicted have vocal opponents of registration, which caused registration protestors to call the trials "political show trials" designed to "scare" other resistors. Those against registration also believe the trials prosecute "selectively," instead of prosecuting all those guilty of nonregistration.

One federal judge in California ruled that the registration program was invalid and dismissed charges against David A. Wayne, a nonregistrant on the grounds of selective prosecution. The issue is likely to reach the Supreme Court before it is resolved.

Meanwhile, the prosecutions do not seem to be affecting the number of men registering. In a speech to the GSB, Michael Keller, an Unaffiliated GSB

Senator, questioned, "As U.S. citizens we are guaranteed the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, so how can we idly stand by when our fellow citizens are jailed for their moral beliefs?" Later that night the GSB voted against his resolution that condemned the current draft registration. GSB did vote later to send $25 to the Rusty Martin defense fund, but this was challenged, and went to the GSB Supreme Court.

Besides the indictments, the Reagan administration is cracking down on nonregistering students. In a plan effective in June, 1983, all men seeking federal financial aid must prove that they have registered. Protestors to this plan feel that it is, again, selective prosecution, because it singles out lower income nonregistrants.

Hall projected, "I think they'll just keep prosecuting and taking a lot of time, trying to pressure the seventeen and eighteen-year-olds until people rise up and make it known that they won't accept political trials." Fenn added, optimistically, "The government will never come out and say the resistance is working, when, in fact, it looks like it is."

GSB Resolution Attacks

"It seems to be that most colleges that take athletics seriously adopt an uncaring attitude toward acts of thuggery by their athletes, and Iowa State is no exception," wrote Donald Kaul in his Des Moines Register column on November 1, 1982.

There were rumors — talk about beatings. There were accusations — speculations concerning criminal charges never filed or else dropped. And there were allegations — gossip about ISU officials. Then on Tuesday, October 26, 1982, the Government of the Student Body (GSB) Senate passed Resolution #82015R. A resolution is a statement of the GSB Senate's opinion. This one calls for banning any ISU athlete convicted of a violent crime from participation in ISU varsity athletics. It also promotes reprimanding any ISU official who unethically interferes in the prosecution of a varsity athlete who has committed a crime. A special GSB investigative committee was also formed consisting of GSB president Hafie Still, Terry Rickers, GSB vice president, and five GSB senators to look into the issue concerning criminal behavior by ISU varsity athletes.

The resolution drew strong support from some people and heavy criticism from others.

Rickers said the resolution addresses complaints against athletes from this year as well as past years. "We had enough people showing concern that perhaps there's a double system of justice at this university," he said. The investigative committee plans to work the rest of the year, and then publish a report on its findings. Rickers said if the allegations are found to be true "we will not condone it," but if the allegations are proved false "we'll say so and clear the air."

In a letter published in the Iowa State Daily, George Jessen, Co-Captain of the 1982 ISU football squad, suggested that some of the GSB senators were using the power of their office to wage vendettas against varsity athletes. "The average football player pays a higher price for the privilege of representing ISU than the average student," Jessen wrote, citing the hours of work athletics entails and the serious risk of injury athletes face. He went on, writing, "On the occasion that one of us does stray from responsible actions, we expect to be treated as any other student."

Rickers agreed with the idea. "There should be a code of conduct for everyone," he said, but added, "but is it being applied the same to everybody?" He said the resolution was aimed at varsity athletes not because the senators wanted to wage a vendetta against athletes, but because "all the concerns we've had are expressed towards athletes." In a letter to the Iowa State Daily, Jeff Elliott, TRA GSB senator, explained one of his reasons for proposing the bill would be as a deterrent. "If they know they will not be allowed to participate if convicted of a violent crime, then I doubt that they would be as likely to commit the crime," he reasoned.

While some people claimed the resolution was a witch hunt and called for another resolution affecting all students, Rickers defended the resolution saying, "We're not trying to be vindictive towards anybody, but when students come to us and express fear and concern over this issue, we'd be derelict in our duty if we didn't look into it."

Working For Fun & Profit

Some of the popular jobs where students find employment off-campus are fast food restaurants, stores, ice cream parlors, and gas stations.

Sophomore Jerry Short works at the Piester gas station as an assistant manager. While maintaining a 3.5 grade point average and carrying nineteen credits, Short is also a member of the Army ROTC National Guard.

"I've always worked so working now is no big change," explains Short, who started working when he was fifteen years old.

Merchants off-campus aren't the only sources of income for students. Many jobs are available in the Memorial Union.

Freshmen Barry Truman spends seven to ten hours a week working at the Ice Cream and Yogurt Shop in the Commons area in the Union.

"This was a pretty convenient job because it worked into my schedule," says Truman. "I look at it as another class."

The only problem that Truman saw with this job was "when tests came up, I had to work anyway."

The residence halls also offer jobs from elevator operating to food service employment. Each person that works food service spends fifteen hours a week on the job.

"The time that I spent working would be blowoff time if I wasn't working," says Kim Kozeliski, a food service employee.

"This was good for me because I'm out of state," says Kozeliski.

"It's the only job I know of that you get paid before you do any work."

The New Kids In Town

Many students were surprised when they returned to Ames after summer vacation to discover that many of the old familiar places around town had been replaced with new restaurants or bars. Campustown really changed. Campus Plaza now has added a new bar, the Underground Cafe. Sun-Your-Buns added color to the complexion, and D&B became a favorite spot to munch on cookies and croissants.

Quick Trip moved next door and Minsky's Pizza Joint moved from the Plaza to where the Quick Trip was. To complicate matters, Great Plains Pizza opened another business in campustown. Other new additions in campustown are Dark Star and Johnny's Ringside Lounge.

Lincoln Way also had a few changes. The Theatrical Shop moved next to Balloon Boutique. Shenanigan's took the place of Hamburger Harry's. Lincoln Way also added the Mandarin, a Chinese restaurant. El Capuccino's filled Hickory Park's old building.

It must have seemed that Ames didn't have enough bars to keep everyone happy because the Underground Cafe, the Dallas Club and the Razzbarr opened their doors. Gold's was renamed the Top o' the Town Annex after a fire destroyed part of the building.

New bars weren't the only businesses giving stiff competition for students' wallets. New pizza places tried to outdo each other with advertisements about how great their pizza was. Pizza Plus and Domino's both opened, promising fast, free delivery.

It's a shock to come back to good old Ames and find out that it changed so much over the summer. In only three months, quite a few changes took place. Not surprisingly, though, the types of places which seem to go in and out of business are the ones which are competing for students and their small budgets. Just imagine how Ames will look at your 25th class reunion!

Moving Back Home

The men of Phi Gamma Delta began to see the reality of moving home and 325 Ash Avenue will come back to life.

The Fijis moved to apartments off-campus and later to Schilleter Village, while waiting for the completion of the refurbishing of their fraternity house. The Fiji house was gutted by fire in January, 1982, and made front page news in papers from Minnesota to California. A single-page spread in Life magazine showed their ice-covered mansion from coast to coast.

Cold, snowy weather welcomed ISU students back to Ames in January last year. Everyone knew it was bad when classes were cancelled on the first Friday after Christmas break.

Ironically, what started out as an unexpected and welcome vacation day ended up marring the rest of the year for many of the Fijis. On January 15, most students were happy to hear of the cancellation of school and the Phi Gams were no exception. They enjoyed the three-day weekend with a game of poker and a fire in the fireplace, said junior Dale Knoshaug.

A log which fell inside an ash dump started a blaze that grew out of control and continued for several hours. Firemen still were watching it burn the next morning.

Even though many of the Phi Gams lost almost everything they owned, they made the best of the situation. The Red Cross and other organizations donated money, clothing and food to the fraternity. A few days after the fire the Fijis moved to the Oakwood Apartments, south of the ISU campus, where they lived for the rest of the year. At the beginning of classes this year, they moved to Schilleter Village.

"The worst part was probably the fact that we didn't know when we were going to be able to move back home," said Chip Foster, house president. "Initially it was January, and then March," he said.

Foster said it was also hard to rush for new pledges while living off-campus. "The university has really been great about everything," he said.

Foster said the Phi Gams have remained close, even though they have been separated physically. He said one important factor in their sticking together has been their active social committee. "That is one thing that hasn't changed at all," he said.

It's ironic that 1982 marked Phi Gamma Delta's seventy-fifth year on the ISU campus and yet they are starting anew. Foster said the Phi Gams plan on being here for at least another seventy-five years. Chances are they will be. They've certainly proven their determination.

A Little Credit For A Lot Of Hard Work

They're there at every football game, no matter how cold it is, waving their hats, cheering and leading the fans in spirit. Who are they? The Iowa State Cyclone Marching Band! They perform a different halftime show at every game, which is worth craning your neck around the crowd to see. The crowd enjoys their colorful uniforms, flags, and sparkling instruments.

But who is crazy enough to spend around fifteen hours a week marching and practicing for one credit hour? There are 250 band members, from every college on campus and ranging from freshmen to graduate students. "They're all slightly wacky," said marching band director James McKinney. When asked why they're in band, most members sum it up with, "It's fun!" Some also mention the trip to Colorado as one of the rewards.

One proof of the enthusiasm that the marching band generates is the activity of their alumni. At homecoming this year, over 150 of them marched in the halftime show with the regular band, reliving a few of those fond memories.

To join the band, a student has to try for one of the openings left by last year's graduating seniors. Last year, there were seventy-five openings, an unusually large number. The spots are filled on a first-come, first-serve basis for some instruments and by audition for other instruments. It can get pretty competitive if there are forty people trying out for two spots. But once someone gets in, he or she is never replaced.

The leadership of the marching band, besides Director McKinney, is provided by Joe Christensen, director of bands; Dan Phillips, assistant director of bands; and Tim Jensen, student director. There's also Trish Lenarz and Vicky VanMaanes, banner coaches; David Artley and Don Ekstrand, drum majors; and Bob Lindemeyer, the announcer.

When asked how he thought the ISU band compares to the other Big Eight marching bands, McKinney said, "We feel like we're right at the top, leading the way." Of course we're slightly biased, but why not? Our Cyclone Marching Band is something to be proud of.

Two Special People

At a time when many ISU students are cut from classes because of overcrowding, Reno Lippold, a senior in electrical engineering, is the only student in his nuclear engineering 501 class. At the beginning of the semester, when he first walked in and saw only one other person in the classroom, he thought that he was in the wrong place. But the class was held, even when the other student enrolled in it dropped out.

According to the Office of Space and Schedules, a class can be canceled if fewer than ten students take it. But the instructor, Benjamin Ma, was enthusiastic enough about the course that he decided to teach it anyway.

Lippold said, "It turned out to be pretty decent." The instructor lectured and wrote on the board just like in a normal class, but he "felt less reluctant to ask a question." Of course, being the only person in a class has its drawbacks, too. There's no one to help out with homework assignments, and it's not easy to skip class. Lippold only missed class once, when he was in the hospital.

Lippold is looking forward to graduating at Christmas. After that, he plans to work for the Air Force for at least four years.

Lippold's experience as the only student in his class should be an example to all of us.

If we want to get into all our classes, we've got to stop taking Biology 101 and Speech 211 and start going for things like nuclear engineering for non-nuclear engineering majors, history of the Romance languages, or epistemology and metaphysics.

A pre-concert cocktail party eight hundred feet above Ames... a midnight picnic on a golf course... and a romantic candlelight dinner for two in the Hub. These are just a few of the creative dates that Dave Kaufmann, a senior in Industrial Engineering, has taken ISU women on.

"I just sit down and think 'God, what would be fun?'" Dave said when asked where his ideas came from. He considers all of the resources in Ames, and says that "after five years here, I have a lot of connections." For example, Dave is a friend of the president of the Flying Cyclones Sports Club, and he gets discounts for his airborne dates.

"That one was originally going to be a hot-air balloon trip, and then a helicopter, but I finally had to go with the airplane. I always have back-up plans."

Dave never tells his dates where they are going, and sometimes they are blindfolded. "I tell them how to dress, but I convince them that it will be more fun if I don't tell them ahead of time what's happening." Almost all of his dates involve a chauffeured ride with champagne.

"The Hub date was just a crazy idea — I don't know where it came from." Dave and his blindfolded date were chauffeured to the Hub, where there was a white tablecloth, flowers, candles, and beverages set up. Dave's roommate, Rob Latta, a senior in Mechanical Engineering, served as waiter and chauffeur. The menu included tuna salad sandwiches, candy bars, pop and gum, all purchased from the vending machines by Rob.

The date also included bowling at the Memorial Union (with both balls in the same lane at the same time), and a trip down Main Street, stopping for one drink at each bar.

Roxane Olson, a junior in General Arts, was the chosen girl for Dave's airplane date, which took place before the Journey concert. "All week he'd been telling me to expect some big surprise, and then he comes up in this big black Lincoln, with champagne and a chauffeur. I couldn't believe it, and by the time we got to the airport, I was really freaking out," Roxanne recalls. "I did have lots of fun — we flew over Des Moines and saw a really beautiful sunset. It was the most different date of my life."

Finally, Dave said that many of his dates don't understand why he goes to all the trouble and expense (an average date runs Dave $30-$40). "Well, I guess I just like to show people a good time, and do something different. It's really fun to share a new experience with them."

EVERY GOOD

While music students fill Music Hall with clashing combinations of imperfected preludes and fugues, young virtuosos march to a different beat — their heartbeats. Preschool children from the ages of two to five meet one night each week to sing, clap and march in the Music Experience Laboratory at Iowa State University.

"The young child is the most uninhibited creative artist in the world," according to David G. Woods, Dr. Woods, a professor of music and education, plans, coordinates, and directs the laboratories along with Dr. Catherine Jarjisian and Music 446 students.

The labs are built on themes such as Sesame Street, a birthday party, Santa Claus, animal friends and "Moving with Music." When the children arrive, they are given a name tag depicting the theme of the particular lab.

In the "Moving with Music" lab, each child is given a name tag in the shape of a truck as they arrive with their parents or guardians. Parents are allowed to observe their children and assist if necessary during the forty-five minute session.

Forming a big circle on the floor, the children joined Dr. Woods in a song. Then each child took turns sharing a sound-maker he or she brought from home. While clanging keys and shaking homemade rattles made from breakfast cereal, the children learned to listen for word patterns sung by Dr. Jarjisian in a song titled "Stamping Land."

Dr. Woods said labs have to move at a fast pace in order to hold the children's attention. "They're used to that quickness in Sesame Street," Dr. Woods said.

Some of the children had an opportunity to listen to their own heartbeats with a stethoscope and then clap out the beat. "For so long we have tried to get children to match our pitch," Dr. Woods said. "If they sing a song, they sing it to the tune of their heartbeat."

The Music Experience Laboratory is the most important time of the week for many of the children, according to Dr. Woods, who said he has received favorable comments about the lab from parents.

Dr. Woods said that there is a waiting list of thirteen months for children wanting to get into the lab. "We don't advertise it at all," he said.

The labs, which are the only ones of this nature in the United States, were founded by Dr. Woods, and are free of cost. Currently there are three different lab sessions which meet on Monday and Tuesday evenings with about thirty children enrolled in each lab.

Children completing the program have a better sense of rhythm before they begin school, Dr. Woods said. He also said students taking the sessions score higher on music aptitude tests.

Dr. Woods said there was a tendency for children to steer away from music as they progress in the school system. "Somewhere in the school system we compartmentalize life as life, and art as art," Dr. Woods said, but "art is life, and life is art."

Keeping In Step With The Service

Every ROTC unit in the state of Iowa recorded increases in the number of recruits in the fall of 1982, some by as many as fifty students. Across the state more than 900 people have joined their future with that of the military — and that includes a growing number of women.

This year, the ISJ ROTC programs have gained many female recruits. For example, the Air Force ROTC includes twenty-five women this year. Sixteen of these are freshmen. And the Navy ROTC includes eight women this year, five of them being freshmen.

These women say they have many different reasons for joining the ROTC programs. It may be for economic reasons, or for the job security that the Pentagon offers. But for many, it is because of their patriotism. They enjoy the responsibility and the challenge that ROTC offers.

The ROTC requirements for men and women are much the same. All ROTC members must meet particular credit requirements each semester for classes offered through their program, whether it be the Navy, Army or Air Force program.

And they must do well in these classes. If any ROTC student is on temporary enrollment in the university, he or she in this case, is also automatically on T.E. in the unit until her grades come up.

Women in the ROTC programs must also meet physical fitness requirements just as the men do. These requirements vary slightly between women and men, depending on which unit the woman belongs to. For example, in the Air Force program, women are given approximately two minutes and thirty seconds longer to do the one and a half mile run.

But women, just like men, move on to serve time in their military field after they graduate from the ROTC program here at ISJ. Their college education is only a preliminary step. Air Force ROTC graduates, both those with and without scholarships, must serve at least four years in the Air Force. Navy and Army ROTC graduates with scholarships are required to serve at least four years also. Those without scholarships must serve for at least three.

SET IT QUIET

Formed out of the ashes of an ill-fated heavy metal chamber orchestra, Set It Quiet took form in late 1981. Guitarist Rik Myers shrugged off an attempt to affix a punk or new wave label to the band, preferring "new progressive." But even that term is tenuous at best. "Set It Quiet is in a continuous state of flux," asserts Myers. "Its evolution reflects our attitudinal shifts and technical maturation. If we maintained our current personnel, the band might become a punkau funkau nuevo-wave momba combo."

Their "current personnel" includes vocalist John Palmer, Ken Alvin on bass, guitarist Rik Myers, drummer Ryan Hill, and Joel Palmer on keys.

Four members of the band are seniors, with majors including microbiology, forestry, and Aerospace Engineering. "Our intellectual diversity and mixed personalities constitute 'Set It Quiet's' primary strength."

The band was originally conceived in order to play one gig at Dugan's Deli. They noticed that most of the bands who played Tuesday night Live shows were largely ignored. "For the most part, the bands provided music to bleed with the sounds of glasses clinking and pitchers spilling."

"The band's name was developed as a partial statement of purpose. We wanted the patrons to shut up for at least five seconds, look up and say, 'My God, I really hate these people or I really love them or I don't understand them at all, but something is going on up there.' It worked."

Set It Quiet plays music by bands like Random Hold, Joy Division, Cure, and the Psychedelic Furs. Myers explains that the underlying philosophy of these bands is, "life's rotten, so why don't I kill myself." We happen to think this is a statement of overwhelming stupidity. What we would like to accomplish is to make them (the crowd) react strongly—stand up and tell us we're wrong or examine their own world views, looking for philosophical inconsistencies and death traps before they commit moral suicide. We promote critical thinking and responsible autonomy by slinging counterexamples like bricks."

Besides the performance at Dugan's, Set It Quiet played a show for the Media Arts Workshop, and entertained friends and curious picnickers at Emma McCarthy Lee Park. "We get a lot of support from our friends," laughs Myers. They watch us pretty closely... looking for clues to the second act."

M. R. Stanley

Internships for Experience

Practical experience. A chance to test new ideas. A summer internship spent at sea, employed by the government, can be fun, Greg Meyer tried it.

Greg is a senior, Fisheries and Wildlife Biology major from Dubuque, Iowa. He spent June to September in the Bering Sea, working for the National Marine Fisheries Board.

Before leaving for the Bering Sea, he went to Seattle, Washington, to train for about a week, after which he was flown to the Aleutian Islands.

Greg's job was to examine the Japanese's catch every six hours and keep an account of the number and length of each species caught. He was working essentially for the U.S. government, making sure the Japanese met requirements and stuck to guidelines and regulations outlined by the U.S. government.

He fished on three Japanese fishing vessels. The work had him out to sea on one boat for weeks, back to shore for a few days and then out to sea again on another boat.

Being on Japanese vessels, meant living around people who spoke either none or very poor English. However, the Japanese were very friendly and communication went well using facial expressions and gestures. Japanese are big on giving and receiving gifts. The photograph shows one Japanese hat he received. He gave away a U.S. captain's cap he had purchased. The Japanese loved it.

Having a high interest in and wanting a future career dealing with marine mammals, this was a perfect opportunity for Greg to observe several species first hand. He saw whales, seals and water fowl just to name a few. He had little spare time to do his homework, since he was on a six hour rotating schedule. Every four to five hours a catch would be coming in and he would need to get to work, which on the average took one to two hours for each catch. Spare time was spent sleeping.

Being criticized was part of working the job Greg had. He received a high rating. Part of this was due to his observation of a unique fish that was far north, beyond its normal range.

The summer experience was a valuable one for Greg Meyer and he wants to work for National Marine Fisheries Board again.

A lot can be gained from working in one's field before graduating. Not only the discovery of whether the right major has been chosen, but career experience and self-awareness are profits also.

Alcohol task force. As a member of the Council of Student Affairs, Dan Zaug has been instrumental in shaping the university alcohol policy. His position in the alcohol task force involved participation in inter-university alcohol education conferences with representatives from other student governments. In retrospect, Dan commented that Iowa State's resident hall keg policy is much more liberal than at other universities. The administration of these guidelines promotes responsible alcohol use in controlled environments.

Dan's attraction to resident hall living resulted in his election to the UDA presidency. In the past he served as the vice-president and social chairman of Chamberlain House in Friley Hall. "I enjoy dorm life because it allows me to participate in many activities . . . and my friends are close at hand."

Dan will be graduating with a degree in mechanical engineering. He would like to work in industry for a major aircraft manufacturer with an option to continue his education at a later date.

Proctor. As a senior in sociology, Jean Madden decided to supplement her education by working as a proctor for Soc. 134 classes. Four undergrads were selected to participate in the program. "They prefer to hire people that intend to go on to graduate school," says Madden. Her duties include grading projects, keeping records, and providing personal assistance to students. As a proctor, she was given the option of lecturing one of the class sections that number over 200 people, but has not taken advantage of the opportunity.

Outside of her proctoring, Jean worked at the Iowa State Center for four years, served as president and social chair of Lowe House and is a member of two honoraries: Kappa Delta Pi, and Alpha Kappa Delta. After graduation, she would like to continue her formal education in sociology.

Individual Majors Option Combines Interest

Are you happy with your major? Iowa State University does offer Individual Majors through the college of Science and Humanities. Jane Kalkreuth has taken advantage of this program. A graduate of May 1983, she is a prime example of a student the college worked with.

As a freshman, Jane headed into university life with an open option in the area of science. When she was younger she had wanted to go to medical school. However, she soon found she could not devote 24 hours a day to medicine. While Jane was taking a variety of science courses, she was also studying in art, as an interest. Since she could not devote herself totally to science and she loved art, a change of majors seemed logical. However, soon after her switch, she began to miss the science classes. With her mixture of interests, she continued to look for other options, until she found the solution in Individual Majors. She was able to combine her interests in art and science.

Jane successfully divided her time between these courses and became a Biological/Medical Illustration major.

Only six or seven students have undertaken this specific major in the past. Because of its growing popularity, the university board is considering recognizing Biological/Medical Illustration as an official major.

After graduation, Jane hopes to live in a large city and apply for graduate school. There are under ten graduate schools in the U.S.A. that offer work in Biological/Medical Illustration. While attending graduate school, she hopes to work for a medical school or publishing company doing illustrations.

Her goal is to become a free lance illustrator, working in veterinary medicine. She would enjoy illustrating surgical procedures. These illustrations would be used for educational purposes, so they are more detailed than photographs.

"I just sort of fell into this major. People pressure you for a major when you have an open option. Beginning students should ignore the pressure. Take general courses of interest and keep their eyes open. Everything will fall into place. Try talking to the advisors in the college of Sciences and Humanities. They can be a lot of help."

Jane Kalkreuth is happy with her Individual Major. She is one of the students at Iowa State University who explored the options ISU offers.

"Ambush Education." Throughout his career at ISU, Doug Rife has been an integral part of the forces that shape the "State of the Union." As the Fine Arts Director, he organized programs, and activities that include Art a la Carte, Notes at Noon, and the annual big band dance. Unsuspecting patrons of the Maintenance Shop were routinely waylaid by dance, art or music presentations when they only came in for a beer.

Doug's work at the Union did not stop with inducing aesthetic awareness in the unwary. As a member of the Student Union Board, he has served on the board of directors, the executive committee, the articles and bylaws committee, and the officers selection committee.

Doug enrolled at Iowa State after several years of working and vocational art education. He feels that attending college as an older student gives different perspective on higher education. The university provides formal training, but extracurricular activities broaden experiences. Doug's twenty credit course load stands testimony to his dedication as a student, but his participation in the decision making process at the MU may have an impact on Union program administration for another fifty years.

Foresight. Mark Fuchs and several other students defined a student need and provided for it. They developed a support base, formed a private company, and now publish Foresight magazine. Fuchs and Co. produce a handy reference for graduating students that answers questions about life after college. Foresight's circulation includes all juniors and seniors and is paid for in its entirety by the advertising budget. Student-owned and operated, articles are contracted out on an individual basis to interested students. "It was a good experience for the staff and me," commented Fuchs. "Hopefully, our company's effort will set an example for future seniors."

Mark is currently studying marketing and has an eye on getting additional work experience before returning to school for a master's degree in business administration. In addition to working as publisher of Foresight, Mark applied his marketing skills last fall through an advertising specialties and promotion company. Mark's positions on the Student Alumni Association executive committee and in publicity for the Senior Class Council rounded out his administrative services.

Age Three

Persistence Pays Off for Navy Recruits

Armey, Navy, Air Force, Marines! Any person can choose to go one of these routes when he or she enters college by enlisting in the ROTC program. Two female seniors, Tanya Tilton and Barb Montgomery, chose to become Navy ROTC's and are the only females in their graduating class.

Although both women found disadvantages to being a female in the Navy, Tilton says that "ROTC men are fun to work with and enjoyable. It's a good experience because I have to work with men the rest of my life."

"You have to show them that you're there to work," says Montgomery. "You gotta stand up on your own two feet once in a while. You can't be spacy. If you're spacy, the respect won't be there." Montgomery has always wanted to be a part of the heart of the Navy. She wanted to pilot ships but wasn't able to because they weren't letting women do that. Instead, she sat back and watched. It wasn't until after her first-class cruise that she decided that she wanted to go to Surface Warfare Officers School.

While on her first-class cruise, Montgomery had the navigator turn to her and say that she was going to anchor the ship the next morning at 5 a.m. She was up on the bridge that morning at 3:30, and the crew was counting on her to give orders.

"I cruised that baby in there and I anchored it. I think back on that and I go,

"God, I actually did something like that."

Tilton started out as an army ROTC in Missouri. After asking herself, "Do I really want the Army?" she decided to enlist in the marines. She then transferred to Iowa State as a Navy ROTC.

"Once you're commissioned, the Navy pays wherever you travel," says Tilton. "Also, anything medical is free, you receive a living pay allowance and a uniform allowance. Gas on base is three-fourths the price, and liquor is cheaper. I have it made and I love it." Tilton wants to get into communication and do the "best possible job."

Letters drive students to drink

Flush letters. Your first reaction is to strangle the ugly piece of paper in agony. Or perhaps shred the spoiler into a thousand pieces until it cries out in forgiveness and apologies. If you have some experience in dealing with the problem, you may simply crumple the unsavory sheet and give it the roundfile.

While all these options afford the rejective a means of getting back at the rejector, for those students favorably disposed toward alcoholic beverages, the letter may be put toward a more productive use.

By presenting your flush letter at Cy's Roost, 121 Welch Ave., your disappointment can be consoled by a free shot of your favorite bar liquor.

Don Walters, owner-manager of Cy's Roost and Don's Deli said he was approached with the promotion idea by Mark Fuchs, Mkt 3, publisher of Foresight — a graduate preparatory publication distributed to nearly 6000 seniors.

Since the free shots offer appeared in an advertisement in Foresight in October, a steady flow of students has appeared bearing flush letters, Walters said. At 1.30 a shot, Walter's bar gave away approximately $278 in October. "Financially, it's almost borderline whether it has backfired," he said.

But whatever Walters is losing financially, he seems to be making up for in public good will. "Rather than have dime or nickel draws, I decided to do this. It's something that makes students feel good about the place."

Walters said he was pleasantly surprised by the favorable response to the ad. "I wish all my ads had this response." Walters said students have been fairly responsible in claiming the free shots, with a few notable exceptions. "There have been some people coming in with thirty or forty flush letters." In such cases, Walters said he gives the person two or three free shots.

BOMB '83 is a composite of memories from the 1962-83 school year. The BOMB staff tried to capture as many memories as possible in the number of pages allowed in this book. Due to the number of events throughout the year at Iowa State, we regret that not all activities and events could be covered.

We wish to give thanks to all of those who supported us with confidence and cooperation.

We thank everyone at Taylor Publishing who helped produce our book, especial Dick LoPachin, Tim Hartz, and Barbara Thompson, representatives of the College Division; and Flo Walton, Account Executive.

Thank you to Delma Studios, our senior photographers for their interest in our book, including Gerald Schneider, Vice President and Rick Sattler, photographer. Also thank you to our group photographers, Mark Jolesch and Brent Olsen of Jolesch Photography.

Thank you to the Publication Board, the backbone of this book, along with our office manager, Lou Christensen, and our adviser, Doug Whittle. Without their support this book would not have been possible.

A special thanks goes to the Ames community, especially Pizza Pit and Ames Photography for their assistance.

Changes

There are places I remember, all my life, though some have changed.

Some forever not for better some have gone and some remain.

All these places had moments, with lovers and friends
I still can recall.

Some are dead and some are living, in my life I've loved them all.

In My Life
